THE HAIR

asking? Will your barber say "Want a little off the top? Ha Ha!"

Will your grand-daughter ask you if it hurts to be bald? Will Boy Scouts try to help you cross the street?

There are so many concerns.

What about your friend, the comedian, who states that your hair is a bit thin, then splits his sides over the line "But who wants fat hair anyway?" Will your wife suddenly caution you to wear your cap, in cold weather to protect your bald spot? Will a friend ask you to move your head, so the sun doesn't glint off the bald spot?

When you first notice that you are balding, you reason that it will never all fall out -- it only falls out one hair at a time -- it will take forever. You become most aware of the T.V. commercials about hair loss. You know -- the ones that show the before and after pictures. Note that the pretty girls are always shown with the "hairy" after picture. You reason that you might go for the treatment, if you looked like Bobby Hull, as a result. Ah -- the vanity of the male!

You wonder how you would look with a hair piece -- but you know you would never have the nerve to wear it. Besides, would you have to wear a chin strap on a windy day? Ho! Ho! -- that's a bald joke - folks!

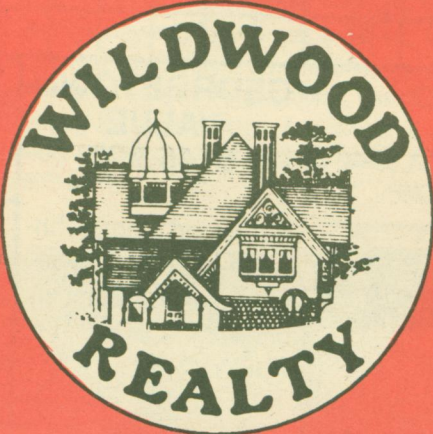

You start to recall and make note of famous bald men. Just think of the dashing Yul Brinner -- Now He was bald! Sir Winston Churchill was bald, and it didn't slow him down any. Come on - think -- there must be more than just two!

You notice that the part in your hair is gradually moving closer to your ear, so more long hair can be combed over your bald spot. Surely, this is a natural phenomena. Surely, you are not doing this on purpose. Of course, you are doing this on purpose, and what are you going to do when you get the part right down to your ear -- you dummy!

Another burning question in search of an answer. How come your barber doesn't give you a discount, because there is less hair to cut, on your head? Answer me that!

And my son, Jon, is certain to shoot me if I mention that baldness runs in the Ellis family males.

It is indeed a terrible time. By the way Baldy, don't forget to wear your hat, if you go out in the sun. Don't want to burn our bald spot, do we?
