Business (almost) as Usual at Windsor Castle

Windsor Castle's State Apartments have reopened to the public only eight weeks after fire raged through the world's largest inhabited castle, 21 miles west of London. Visitors can now view 11 of the 15 apartments and two more open soon. They are being refurbished as part of a major five-year program and will provide visitors with a vantage point looking the full length of the damaged St. George's Hall. That hall, scene of magnificent formal banquets, and the Grand Reception Room were devastated by the fire and researchers are sifting through tons of debris looking for remains of molded plaster, metalwork and chandeliers that might be re-used or copied. Visitors can view the damage through perspex doors. The Waterloo Chamber has an exhibition about the fire. Damage was confined to the northeast corner of the castle and most of the huge building, including the 14th century St. George's Chapel was unaffected. We will still be including a visit to Windsor on our three week escorted tour of Britain and Ireland departing on August 6th.
