THE TRUST

A regular meeting of the Downtown Brain Trust would discuss, in the future, if all our new type politicians, coming along, were intelligent, concerned and wise. The Chairman assured the meeting that the voters would always elect enough of the other kind of politician, to keep the Trust members frustrated and amused.

Immediately the meeting was called to order, a member broke into a quick verse of "Happy Days Are Here Again!" in celebration of Mike Wilson announcing he would not seek the Tory leadership. The member went on to note that Brian had resigned and Mike was going to disappear quietly and what could we do now to get John Crowe, Governor of the Bank of Canada, out of the picture. The member maintained that these were "Three Horsemen of the Depression". The member allowed as how Crowe had always been the most dangerous of the three, in that Crowe, most likely, knew that high interest rates would plunge the country into depression. The other two, most likely, had no idea of what they were doing. More's the pity!

Another member noted that Kim Campbell had suddenly become the darling of the Canadian media. She has been referred to as a "bright, new face." He wondered if this was the same bright, new face that was pushing for the purchase of the new helicopters, with an anticipated price of 5.8 billion dollars (and if allowed to proceed, would likely reach 7 billion dollars.) The member stated that Kim just sounded like the Mulroney squad, always attempting to justify the unjustifiable. Nothing much bright and new in that!

On a lighter note, a member wondered why John Crosbie had not put forth his name for the Tory leadership. It was possible that John was just not as sure as he could be, on taking the vote of female convention delegates!

A member wondered what the Downtown Brain Trust would discuss, in the future, if all our new type politicians, coming along, were intelligent, concerned and wise. The Chairman assured the meeting that the voters would always elect enough of the other kind of politician, to keep the Trust members frustrated and amused.

Another Trust member made an observation on the upcoming summit meeting, between President Clinton and President Yeltsin, to be held in Vancouver. He noted that B.M. the P.M. has been invited to handle introductions only. "Mr. Clinton - Mr. Yeltsin, Mr. Yeltsin - Mr. Clinton --- How do you do? - see you later Mr. Muldoon." "Da"

A member wanted to know why Joe Clarke was so quiet. He wondered why Joe would not declare for the Tory leadership, if for no other reason, than to give Brian Mulroney a case of heartburn. It would be downright funny if Joe bested Brian in the final round of political harpoony.

Then ensued a general discussion pertaining to the strengths of the Federal Liberal and NDP party leaders. Whatever happened to Preston Manning? After surprisingly short deliberations, the members recommended that the Liberals and the NDPers also hold a leadership convention. If was felt that Canadian voters used to make a last choice vote, based on a theory of voting for "the devil they knew". It would appear now that they will vote for a devil they don't know, or as a last resort "None of the Above"

As reported to me, The Downtown Brain Trust put forth a motion urging "You know Who, with the beard -- to run like he has never run before!"
