

Working with police

At Tuesday evening's meeting of the Halton Roman Catholic School Board, a decision was made for schools to provide more cooperation with the police.

Trustees were given a first draft copy of the proposed policy. Currently, the board's lawyers are examining the document, and will deliver a second draft at a later date. Chris Jewell, communications officer for the board, explained that the policy will list guidelines of how school staff and students can help the police in its inquiries. Different rules will apply for students over 18, and for younger students.

"What we're trying to do is to ensure effective and cooperative relations with the police," explained Jewell.
