Peel water only an option

By Dianne Cornish

A waterpipe connection between Peel and Georgetown is just one of the alternatives being investigated to provide a secure water source to Georgetown, town councillors were assured Monday.

Art Leitch, Halton Region's planning commissioner, told Halton Hills Town Council Monday night, The proposed Peel connection (sourced from Lake Ontario) is "an option and alternative to pursue through the EA (Environmental Assessment) process," he said.

Leitch and other regional officials were asked to attend Monday's meeting to answer questions about the proposed waterline. Two weeks ago, the regional public works department recommended the Region endorse a formal request to Peel for the provision of an interim water supply from its North Meadowvale pumping station to Georgetown.

At present, all of Georgetown's water supply comes from ground-water supplies.

Councillor Gail Rutherford asked about the possibility of a dual system, whereby only new development would be on lake-based water while the balance of Georgetown would remain on the well-based system. "A dual system is technically feasible," Leitch replied.

Rutherford also wanted to know what built-in controls could be put in place to pace development in the community if lake-based water comes to Georgetown. Regional planning commissioner Rash Mohammed suggested the "sequence and rate of growth" can be phased in through the Halton Hills Official Plan.

Leitch explained it would cost $8 million for a well system that would provide sufficient water for Georgetown's projected growth of 40,000 by the year 2011. To install the proposed water connection, the pricetag would be between $6 million and $9 million.

Besides providing Georgetown with a secure source of water, the proposed pipeline has another advantage. "All the infrastructure (pipelines) can be used in a future long-term scheme," the public works commissioner said.

Leitch said it hasn't been particularly difficult to find groundwater for Georgetown, but concerns about the environmental impact of taking additional water from the ground are increasing. The Ministry of Natural Resources and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans are raising these concerns.

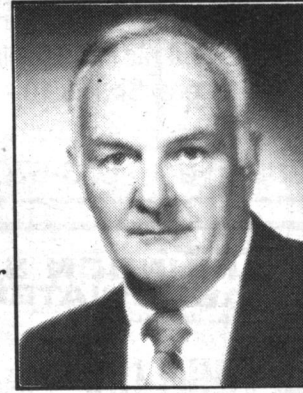

Councillors Al Cook and Marilyn Serjeantson both raised the issue of local autonomy. Can the Region override the town's decision because it has authority over water issues, they asked.

Initially, Mohammed told Cook he would refer the question to the regional solicitor and get back to him with an answer. When Serjeantson later repeated the question, Mohammed said he would advise the town to investigate all water source alternatives because it's required by the Environmental Assessment Act to look at water supply options to meet the needs of future growth in Halton as identified in the Halton Urban Structure Review. NEW DENTURES CAN ERASE WRINKLES

Vertical wrinkles around the mouth may be caused by ill-fitting dentures. False teeth that may once have fit well, change considerably as time goes by. When no teeth are present, the gum and bone tissue become unnecessary and nature removes them. They shrink upward, therefore causing the cheeks to sag. Wrinkling and gauntness in the face are two things you must deal with as you grow older, but old or ill-fitting dentures can be responsible for some of these lines.

Because your gums are constantly shrinking, you must update and change your denture regularly, in order to keep them fitting snug, which fills out the face, therefore smoothing out wrinkles. The unattractive appearance is not the only problem with poor fitting dentures. The incorrect bite often causes discomfort or pain. Ear and jaw joint pain, soreness in opening the mouth and headaches are caused by poor fitting teeth. This pain can produce a constant tenderness in the facial muscles, which in turn can contribute to a premature drawn, aged look.

It is very important to have your dentures checked on a regular basis.
