

Catholic board okays strategic plan

The Halton Roman Catholic School Board has approved its strategic plan for the future.

The plan, which evolved from consultations which started in the fall of 1990, prioritizes the upgrading and additions needed in various schools.

It was initiated to give students at Halton's Catholic schools equal access to equipment and programs.

"The plan defines a very clear focus for the board for the next seven years with a commitment to an integrated approach to planning to meet the needs of its school community," said board chair, Irene

McCauley, of Halton Hills.

The plan sets a course for the future, McCauley added.

The seven-year plan outlines an expenditure of $38.7 million, but the entire amount may not be spent.

"Funding for this initiative will be identified from a number of sources over the seven years," director of education, Cliff Byrnes said.

"This strategic management approach will allow for a better allocation of human, financial and educational resources for a proper evaluation of the effectiveness of the system."
