Seat belt video

By Oksana Buhel

Halton Region Police Service is nearing the end of the first phase of its seat belt enforcement campaign. This phase began April 18 and is continuing until this Friday.

Unbelted drivers and passengers in cars which are stopped may face a fine of $90. "Our goal is not to charge, but to raise awareness," explained Halton Regional Police Service Staff Sergeant Mike Kingston, of Georgetown 11 Division.

Not all cars will be stopped. Police officers are standing on roadsides, monitoring seat belt compliance. Individuals spotted without seatbelts may be stopped at a different location.

"We want to raise the compliance level in Georgetown to 95%," Kingston stated. "That will be only 1% lower than in Milton, which has the highest compliance figures in the region."

Some drivers, instead of being issued tickets, will be invited to a mobile command post to watch a 2 1/2 minute video about the possible consequences of not wearing a seat belt. "It's very well done," praises Halton Regional Police Service media relations officer Joe Martin. It's definitely graphic, but not overwhelming. I have no doubt the video will have its desired result.

The video was shown to members of the media on Thursday morning. This is the second year the video is being used.
