Four-legged babysitters

You've probably had babysitters come to your house when your parents went out. But what do animal parents do when they go out? Some animals care for their young the same way we do:

- Range cattle are social animals. They live in groups where relatives and friends often care for the young.
- The male leaders of a Japanese monkey troop walk and groom the fur of the young. These "uncles" also help the infants find food and recognize danger.
- African elephants are led by "grandmother" elephants, and cared for by young teenage babysitting females.
