Home Beautification contest

The Home Beautification Contest is being sponsored by the Brampton Real Estate Board in conjunction with the Georgetown Horticultural Society.

The Real Estate Board feels that pride of home ownership is obvious when homeowners take pride in their gardens. Local realtors agree that selling homes that have been maintained is a real pleasure. Neighbors of homes listed for sale also have a great impact on the sale-ability of the listed home.

The Horticultural Society

feels that no matter how big or small your garden, the pride in watching your garden grow is rewarding. That is why the BREB has offered categories in their contest for apartment balconies, townhouses, private residences and businesses.

It is hoped that people will nominate not just themselves, but friends or neighbors whom they feel are worthy of being recognized.

Judging will take place the last week in July. Awards will be handed out the week of Sept. 26 during Ontario Home Week.

Our Family Social Contract - Stage Two

By George Perdue, B. Sc. P. Eng.

We're back! The kids sure put together an interesting vacation and the rest of the contract continues.

The vacation started the morning after school stopped - early! I was to drive and they would navigate. The plan called for us to travel south. The first night destination unknown, but a long day of driving the first day.

The pattern they had planned unfolded quickly. No conflict in the car! After all, they planned the trip. Breakfast and lunch we would make. Dinner was to be selected by one family member in rotation.

That evening meal became a central focal point each day. "No influencing" became the cry as various family members lobbied for their food preference. The budget concern was continually expressed but tempered with the "it's so cheap in the States".

The first day was long but music from the Beach Boys and countless others helped.

Day two saw us in Williamsburg looking at history and going to Busch Gardens for rides and entertainment.

On the third day we woke up on the beach at Kitty Hawk. It was at this time that we began to understand that the theme for the vacation was the beach.

People walked the beach at night and in the early morning. These were the exercisers and the relaxers. Each morning the beach umbrellas were lined up at the high tide mark, the sun scorched, the sun screen applied, and the sun worshippers lay on the beach and the surf lovers played in the rollers.

Each day unfolded like the other. The self-made breakfast and lunch. The uninfluenced evening meal after a day on the beach, an evening of golf or shopping, and all this within budget! And no conflict!

After the stay we had to change pace and begin the trip home. The plan called for a leisurely pace. The first day ended as we bumped in to a person whose uncle I went to school with and the kids were amazed how small a world it is.

Then early the next day the vacation changed. My wife started to drive. Soon it became apparent that she "smelled the barn" and the pace quickened as she started to go for home. We arrived home as the sun was setting. What a pleasure to sleep in your own bed.

The next day was our last day of vacation and we spent it at home. We started off with a family meeting over breakfast. We agreed that the vacation had gone smoothly. The participative approach had worked very well. We were home early and relaxed. We were under budget. We all learned more about our social contract.
