In the Line of Fire hits the target

By Lawson Oates and Dawn Wood

The summer of 1993 will be remembered as the summer of blockbuster suspense thrillers. First, The Fugitive, starring Harrison Ford and Tommy Lee Jones, and now In The Line Of Fire, starring Hollywood icon Clint Eastwood.

In The Line Of Fire is the story of Secret Service agent Frank Horrigan (Clint Eastwood), the last serving agent who was on duty at the assassination of U.S. President J.F. Kennedy. Horrigan is of the old school, a little too chauvinistic for the '90s and still too rebellious to play office politics. Age has not mellowed him.

Following a tip from a landlady, Horrigan begins investigating a potential plot against the President's life. The would-be assassin, who goes by the of "Booth" (the name of Lincoln's assassin), is a crazed ex-CIA hit-man eager to exact revenge on a system that created a monster and then spit it out.

Booth (played by John Malkovich) takes up a cat and mouse game with Horrigan as he stalks the President. With his in-depth knowledge of the JFK assassination, Booth is able to taunt Horrigan in repeated phone calls by dredging up memories of that fateful day in '63 when Horrigan was slow to react and failed to save the President by becoming a human shield.

The story line builds and builds to a climax that has you hanging on every word and turn of the plot.

Director Wolfgang Petersen, best known for the critically acclaimed Das Boot, draws out a sensitive side in Eastwood that has been anything but his trademark. Petersen is able to actually have Eastwood cry on screen and expose emotions that have drawn from a deep well.

This is not a movie that just showcases Eastwood. He is joined by Rene Russo who plays Secret Service agent Lilly Raines, a member of the new school of agents. Raines becomes fascinated with Horrigan's living legend persona and the sparks fly as the two schools meet.

John Malkovich also puts in a convincing performance as the would-be assassin. While he plays the role of the monster, he is able to create empathy for the character. Malkovich's role is not Oscar material, but he will be nominated. Eastwood, however, has pulled off another Oscar-winning performance on the heels of his 1992 Best Director Oscar for the revisionist Unforgiven.

P.S. The Secret Service is a division of the United States Treasury. In a rare display of openness, the Secret Service actively cooperated with the making of In The Line of Fire.
