Some composting questions and answers

Q What can I do to control the nuisance of flies and other insects around my compost heap?

A It's the insects in the compost heap that do the work of decomposing. As for the nuisance of flies, they are attracted to food scraps, so each time you add food scraps, dig them into the pile or cover the scraps well with soil or dry leaves.

Q Why does my compost heap have an unpleasant odor?

A It doesn't have enough air or it's too wet. Turn it to let air in or use an aerating tool or add dry materials, like leaves, to absorb excess moisture.

Q Nothing appears to be happening in my compost bin. What can I do?

A The compost may be too dry; moisten and mix thoroughly, or you may have a poor carbon-nitrogen ratio. Add more green (nitrogen) or brown (carbon) material.

Learn to compost all year round. Here's a few tips:

- Materials that you add to your bin during the winter will decompose more slowly as the temperature drops and the pile may freeze solid. But as soon as the weather turns warmer, the process will become active again. Cold temperatures are actually beneficial; the freezing action breaks down the fibers in organic material which aids in decomposition once it thaws out.

- To make winter composting more convenient, locate your bin close to the back door rather than in a far corner of the yard.

- Be sure there is plenty of room in your bin in the fall so you can keep adding materials throughout the winter. Avoid filling your bin with leaves. Save some to add gradually to your bin throughout the winter. Another way to ensure adequate room in your bin is to remove some content in the fall that looks close to being fully decomposed and allow to finish decomposing in a pile next to bin.
