~ Downtown Georgetown ~

"Why would your little brother be with me? You're the one who was supposed to be watching him." Trevor said pointedly. "Well, whatever, It's not like I even wanted him to come." Adam snapped. "He can be such a little baby when it comes to being in the dark all by himself."

"All the more reason to find him then, after all, he's only 7." Trevor said.

"All right, let's split up then, it's nearly 9 o' clock, my mom will kill me if we're not home by then." Adam said.

After a half hour search, Trevor gave up and headed back to Adam's house to see if he had found his brother. He saw Adam's mother on the porch looking worried. But Trevor quickly found out it wasn't Matthew they were looking for. "He came home soon after he lost Adam." Mrs. Peterson said. "Mr. Peterson is out looking for Adam now."

Trevor waited until Mr. Peterson came home alone before he headed for home. He was flipping through his magazine again on the way. He was so involved, he wasn't watching where he was going, and bumped right into a stranger.

Trevor looked up into the most horrible face he had ever seen. After mumbling a quick "Excuse me." he quickly walked past. He glanced back to see the man looking at him. Shrugging this off, Trevor went back to his magazine.

He looked at the picture that went with the article and nearly jumped out of his skin. It was the same man.

Looking back again, he saw the man was carrying the same Superman pillow case bulging full of candy Adam had been carrying. It was the last time Trevor ever went out on Halloween.
