

Community vigil against violence

All residents are invited to a community vigil this Monday, 7:30 p.m. at St. George's Anglican Church, to remember victims of violence.

It was four years ago on that date that 14 women were murdered in Montreal's Ecole Polytechnique. This year, people in cities and towns across Canada will gather to commemorate those women, and all victims and survivors of violence.

"We're calling it a service of remembrance, and of commitment to change and transformation" says Linn Kingston, who helped organize the service with women from three local churches: St. George's, St. John's United and Holy Cross.

Through readings, prayers, singing and silent meditation, those present will be able to ponder the theme, "First We Mourn, and Then We Work for Change."

They will also light candles in memory of the women of Montreal and other victims of violence, some to be named aloud, "others named silently in our hearts."

Organizers point to recent news reports that half the women in Canada say they have been assaulted at some time in their lives.

There will be an offering during the short vigil in support of Halton Women's Place, a shelter for battered and abused women.

Everyone is invited to stay for refreshments and conversation afterwards.
