Halton Hills This Week names Gibson as Editor

Halton Hills This Week was pleased to announce the newest addition to the HHTW staff; Colin Gibson as editor. Colin is no stranger to Halton Hills, as he was manager of the Halton Hills Herald before it closed in February, 1992. He also served two stints as sports editor of the Herald, was sports editor of the Nanaimo Daily Free Press and has done news and feature writing for other daily papers as well as providing a column.

"I am looking forward to renewing old friendships and forging new ones," He said at the announcement of his appointment. Born in Scotland, Colin grew up in Northern Ontario and majored in history and minored in political science at Laurentian University in Sudbury. He also studied for a term with the Asian Studies Branch of the political science department at the University of Aberdeen, Aberdeen, Scotland. As well, he studied journalism at Sheridan College in Oakville.

Revolvers replaced

The Halton Regional Police Services has approved the replacement of seven police revolvers with more advanced semi-automatic pistols. "This is the first step in replacing all weapons with semi-automatic pistols," said Deputy Chief Wayne Jessop. The pistols will be able to hold 16 rounds compared to the current six rounds used now. Because of wear, new weapons were needed with in the force, so the money spent on the pistols would have been used for new guns anyway. Six officers in the surveillance unit and one in the canine unit will be the first recipients. They will undergo 20 hours of training. Other specialized units will be equipped with the weapons when replacement guns are needed.
