

April - Babysitter charged in death of six-month-old

Former Halton-Peel MP Garth Turner got involved in a media scrum shortly after the doors opened at his federal Progressive Conservative leadership campaign headquarters. Local media types as well as crews from Gobaal T.V., CITY T.V. and the CBC gave the occasion a festive air. Turner's leadership campaign was described by one of his supporters as a "No frills, coffee cup campaign". photo by Colin Gibson/HHTW

Halton Regional Police Services Major Crime Unit Monday arrested and charged Heather Holmgren, 30, of Kingham Rd. in Acton - the mother of a young child - with manslaughter in the death of a six-month-old baby boy and the assault of a six-and-a-half month-old baby girl.

Information received was supplied by Sergeant Joe Martin, Media Relations Officer with Halton Regional Police Service. On Jan. 18 of this year, an Acton woman called Emergency Services and reported that a six-month-old baby boy she was babysitting had stopped breathing. The child was taken to Hamilton's McMaster-Chedoke Hospital by the Emergency Services personnel, but died the following day. A post-mortem was unable to reveal a cause of death. Further forensic testing was done indicating assault. On March 23, the same woman was babysitting a six-month-old baby girl. The girl was found ill and taken by ambulance to Georgetown and District Memorial Hospital where she was then transported to Toronto's Hospital for Sick Children. Examining staff determined the girl had been beaten. The baby girl was released from the hospital on March 30. As a result of the incidents, Holmgren was investigated, arrested and charged.

Blood scare
Georgetown and District Memorial Hospital received a notice from the Canadian Red Cross Society Wednesday (April 21.) addressing the current concern with respect to the risk of having exposed to HIV if a patient were a recipient of a blood transfusion or the transfusion of blood products before November of 1985. John Oliver, Executive Director, reports the following statement has been received by the hospital from the Canadian Red Cross Society: "There is current intense publicity about the Hospital for Sick Children Study of possible HIV infection in pediatric cardiac surgery patients. This is raising concerns in all individuals who were transfused or think they might have been transfused before blood donations were tested for HIV. The advice of the Red Cross to all transfusion recipients and persons who think they may have received blood is that if they are worried about HIV, they should discuss this with their doctor to arrange for HIV testing. Any person infected before 1985 would have a confirmed positive HIV antibody test." Georgetown and District Memorial Hospital joins the Red Cross in recommending anyone who is concerned about possible HIV infection contact their family doctor to arrange for HIV testing.
