The Cutting Edge

By A.J. Dume

The Cutting Edge follows the predictable love story format of boy meets girl, they hate each other, but are forced to work with each other, and grow to like each other and so on.

The plot centres on a former hockey player turned figure skater who is teamed up with a conceited figure skating star.

Personally, because of the predictable plot, I found the movie to be suitable for younger audiences.

The story line is satisfying, the action is fast paced, and it provides a limited look inside the world of figure skating.

Good family flick.

Rated PG, 102 minutes.

Basic Instinct

By Dave Harmer

This movie is a suspense thriller and when I watched it, I was reminded of Silence of the Lambs. Both were gory murder mysteries, involving psychopathic killers.

Basic Instinct deals with a police officer who suspects a novelist of being a killer, and for the rest? Well, watch for yourself.

Warning! There is coarse language, nudity, and some sex scenes, so this is definitely not a children's movie.

Rated R, 123 minutes.

The Prince Of Tides

By Cheryl Cullingham

A compelling movie with Barbara Striesand as a psychiatrist trying to dig into her patient's past life.

Nick Nolte is the male lead who knows that the only way to save his sister's life is to share the family secrets that he had hidden away for years, with Susan Lowenstein, the psychiatrist, and at the same time he is falling in love with her.

An emotional movie that deals with the power of traumatic family secrets and the need for love.

Rated R, 132 minutes.
