Johnathon vs. Bouchard

Back to Scotty Bowman and his bully boys ... I remember one game in the Stanley Cup finals played at the Boston Gardens. It was a back-and-forth game and there was a tight face-off in the Canadiens end, and for some reason (I still don't know why) Scotty puts in his bully boys: Chatraw, Lupien, Robinson, Trembley and his toughie Pierre Bouchard.

I put on the ice John Wensink and Terry O'Reilly, which I must admit ain't exactly choir boys, but I also had out Peter McNab at centre, who was talented but was a choir boy, so I sent out my little bull terrier, Stan Johnathon, to play centre. (Peter told me after the game that when he saw Stanley coming to take him off he was the happiest guy in the world.)

So they drop the puck and naturally Stan and Pierre come together and Stan actually starts the fight, tugging at Pierre with his stick. They both drop them at the same time and what a beauty!

Pierre was a giant, strong as an ox. Stanley was only 5'7" and about 180. Pierre was actually lifting Stan off the ice, both were really warming up to the fight and it looked bad for Stan at the start.

(To tell the truth, I thought Stan had bitten off more than he could chew.) I said on the bench, "Boys get ready, I think Stan has had it and we're going over the boards." But all of a sudden after Pierre and Stan were exchanging rights, Stan switched to a left and caught Pierre by surprise and down he goes.

Stan hit Pierre about five times on the way down and had to be pulled off. You never saw so much blood.

The linesman, John D'Amico, was cut by a stick so he was covered in blood and Pierre had a broken nose. (He said that when he looked at himself the morning after the fight he said "Serge Savard is my hero, but I don't want a nose like his.") When I asked him if he ever would play in the NHL again he said, "Yeh, if I take up the organ."
