The Bullies vs. the Bruins

Dave "The Hammer" Shultz was something else. I saw him when he was a rookie. I was coaching the Rochester Americans and he was playing for the Richmond Robins. He had the league in terror. I said to myself, "Hey, this is good. I'm going to build the Americans like this," which I did.

The first year I coached against the Bullies while with the Bruins I could see we had a lot of talent, but we weren't tough. So out went the floaters and in came the grinders. Stan Johnathan, John Wensink, Terry O'Reilly, Wayne Cashman, Al Secord and Bobby Schmutz. The Hammer says in his book that Philly had a tough team and Boston had a tough team, but the Bruins had three guys who were nuts. (I don't know if that included the coach or not.)

The games between the Bruins and Philly were classics, even the exhibition games were something. I remember one game in the Spectrum; we had a brawl that lasted a half hour and ended with Cashman and Paul Holgrem duking it out in the corridor outside the dressing rooms. Both got suspended and the play-offs were war. I can recall April 26, 1977, Game 2 of the semi-finals we played over ninety minutes before Terry O'Reilly scored on a pass from Ratelle.
