Acton cyclist Tim Hadfield has been selected to a team composed entirely of Canadian champions that will compete on the North American road and track circuit in the upcoming 1995 season, with carmaker Saturn Canada acting as the team's prime sponsor.

Hadfield, 23, will join Mike Barry, who he teamed with on Canada's four-man team pursuit entry at the Commonwealth Games last August in Victoria, B.C., and four other champion riders.

"The team has the potential to win consistently," said Barry, Saturn Cycling Team technical director, in a news release. "They are headed for the '96 Olympics in Atlanta and it makes sense to get them together as a team, riding for the same sponsor, competing in top-level events against experienced, well-conditioned athletes."

Pauline Hadfield, Tim's mother, is excited her son is part of such a good team, but warned there would be strong competition.

"Saturn has a pro team in the States. I'm excited they've decided to become a sponsor of a Canadian team," she says. "I'm looking forward to seeing him ride for them."

Hadfield returns in June from a four-month stay in France, where he has raced for a national team.
