Not democracy

To the Editor,
What kind of government do we have when the Prime Minister orders members to vote as they are told, or else? It seems that is how Jean Chretien is going to ram gun control legislation through Parliament.
That is the same way we lost the death penalty; the same way we got the GST, the metric system, bilingualism, the Young Offenders' Act, and on and on.

The proposed gun control laws appear to be mainly a show of power and a money grab. Once enacted, Chretien and Rock will be full of their own importance for having introduced new legislation.

Registration fees will probably rise dramatically. Only the honest and conscientious need register. Unless every nook and cranny is searched, who will know which households contain guns?

Claims by politicians to know what the majority wants have got to be false. How could they possibly know? Only a few are heard from on controversial issues — the few who are fanatical enough to cause a disturbance.

While campaigning, Mr. Chretien promised to listen to the common people. Now in power, he is telling members to tow the party line and to hell with what their constituents want.

Democracy? I don't think so. It seems more like oligarchy, does it not?
