Just get a move on!

Slow play is a dilemma every golfer faces. You get caught behind a slow-playing foursome. They don't invite you to play through. How can you get their attention, still observing golf's rules of etiquette, and get your point across?

Perhaps you need to use a gentle reminder – strong enough to make your point but funny enough to not cause tempers to heat up.

Here are a few suggestions. Or by all means, use your own!

- "C'mon, hit. My clothes are going out of style."
- "Hurry up, we'd like to finish this nine before they redesign it."
- "You'd better putt it firmly. The grass grew while you were lining it up."
- "Mind if I play through? When I left home, the Watergate hearings were just starting and I want to see how they turn out."
- "Can't you miss it any faster than that?"

Just remember: These lines are not guaranteed to work. But then again, they might!

To think, he almost won 39!

Lots of people know that Jack Nicklaus has won a record 20 major golf championships. But it is often overlooked that the Golden Bear has been a runner-up in some 19 tournaments!
