Murder in Eden Mills

By DEBORAH QUAILE

It was murder in Eden Mills during June.

The Callithumpian Women Writers' Group, along with many dedicated volunteers, produced the village's first dinner theatre murder mystery. The two shows raised funds for the Eden Mills Community Centre wheelchair accessibility fund.

The play was a rollicking adventure with fictional characters based in the Eden Mills community. Rural Rockwood resident John Cripton creatively "massaged" the play and spent countless hours working it into an engaging script, then directed (and acted with) the eager group.

The premise was the first annual presentation of the Exceptional Novelist in Eden Mills Award, better known as the E.N.E.M.A. Sponsored by the local Township, the winner was chosen by Mayor Zee Dotes, also a resident of the village. The winner received - among other highlights - an attractive E.N.E.M.A., a new septic system, a year's supply of Septo-bac, a blender, and a three-week writing course at Charlatan College. The finalists at the gathering were all best selling authors of the same small community. Naturally, competition was fierce. Each of the authors gave a short reading, the prize was announced, and then someone - of course - died!

The cast included such colourful characters as Jock Disquey, amiable radio announcer and the Awards Night MC; Mayor Zee Dotes, Co-host of the event and Presenter of the E.N.E.M.A. Award; Detective Inspector Hugh Donnat - an impish, determined detective; his bumbling assistant, Officer Cummings Quigley; the stunning Countess Katya Petitpopov, wife of disreputable architect Franklin Boyd Millwright; and several other choice characters. There was also a singing performance by four talented locals - Linda Hendry, Debbie Tilson, Susie Chin and Jenny Kitson.

Guests enjoyed a delectable dinner by Stephen Truchan, owner of the Dr. W.F. Savage House Bed and Breakfast in Elora, of spring green salad, beef sirloin, roasted potatoes, vegetables, and dessert.

Performances were well polished and smooth, and guests thoroughly enjoyed both the meal and hilarity. Cast kept in character during the dining, and tantalized the audience with well-placed clues and dark hints of who-donnit. Congratulations on an exciting evening of hard work and skillful performance.

It really was an evening to ... die for!
