Win the war on weeds!

Tired of fighting weeds in your landscape beds? This spring, end that struggle once and for all.

Believe it or not, the "war on weeds" can be won without resorting to "chemical warfare" or having to battle black plastic.

More and more home gardeners have discovered that they can eliminate weeds in their landscape beds by using landscape fabrics. Professionals have used landscape fabrics for years and have stuck with it because of its effectiveness.

Unlike the old black plastic, the new fabrics are made with UV-treated poly-ethylene with microfunnels that stop weeds from growing by blocking 90 percent of sunlight to the soil. At the same time, it permits the flow of water and air which are essential for plant growth.

Using fabric can last for several years in direct exposure to the sun. First, get rid of all the weeds in the area you're going to landscape. Next, spread the fabric over the plants, cut holes to the sizes needed and pull the fabric down around the plants. Then, just spread mulch, bark or stone over the fabric.

While landscape fabrics deter weeds, they also encourage the growth of healthy plants and shrubs by keeping the soil moist and cool. Because fabric helps retain so much moisture, covered areas require much less watering. Due to its durability, gardeners can spend more time enjoying their gardens and less time weeding and watering.
