Rural Milton pot bust

A day light raid on a rural Milton property on Friday turned up a "substantial" marijuana growing operation including 70 plants and loose marijuana valued at $43,000. Acting on a tip, uniform officers from Milton found the plants, ranging between 1.5 and 5-foot tall, growing among other crops at the Fourth Line West, Milton farm. The crop was cut and along with some drug paraphernalia, was seized as evidence. Charged with producing marijuana and possession for the purpose of trafficking are Robert Gordon Popp, 30, and Lee-Anne Hayes, 45, both of Fourth Line West Milton. They appear in court on September 14.

Theft from car

Over the weekend a burgundy gym bag containing a CD player, CDs and sunglasses - total value $940 - was stolen from a 1992 Geo Tracker belonging to a Church St. W. resident. The woman told police that she always locks doors but there was no sign of forced entry.

False alarm

A rural Acton homeowner will have his security system rechecked after firefighters responded to a false alarm at 7:34 p.m. last Friday. The owner of the home on Hwy. 7, between the Third and Fourth Lines, said the alarm system and smoke detectors had been serviced the previous week.

Can developers sit on approvals forever?

Frustrated by the lack of both residential and commercial development in Acton several local politicians suggest that Town should take a "use it or lose it" approach to planning approvals and water and sewer capacity.

During recent council debate over reports required for the proposed Leathertown Junction plaza Acton Councillor Norm Elliott said that developers can't sit on their approvals forever without putting a shovel in the ground, while others are ready to build.

The Town's manager of development review, Glenn Wellings, said staff wouldn't recommend stripping a developer with planning approvals just because the land has sat idle, waiting for market conditions to improve.

"If (development) isn't happening immediately does that mean we abandon our planning?" asked Wellings recently, adding that they can't make developers build.

"If you want to go back and try and repeal (development approval) there are processes to go through, but you know that's going to raise concerns with developers and they would fight it. To repeal a decision is really just an admission that we don't agree with our planning that we've done."

Ho Wong, Halton's manager of planning services said Regional staff would like to develop a "use it or lose it" policy.

"You're getting into legal territory and whether a commitment is forever or is it short-term and if they don't use it, do we have the authority to take it away?" Wong said, adding staff hasn't been asked by Regional council to investigate the issue.
