Who's 'That Girl Racing' snowmobiles in summer?

By ANGELA TYLER
The New Tanner

While some wives and moms may be at home on weekends tending to stereotypical female tasks, Acton's Tiina Duncanson is breaking tradition. Almost every weekend from now until November Tiina can be found drag racing snowmobiles.

Around three years ago, while attending a snowmobile race in the United States, Tiina, according to her husband Peter Duncanson, decided "Come hell or high water, she was going to race (snowmobiles)."

Tiina and Peter both admit that it can be difficult, as she is the only female racer in her open modified division. She compares it to a top fuel division for cars.

However, Tiina seems to be handling her division quite well. This past year after racing throughout Canada and the United States, she claimed the Ontario Open Modified Championship. Last weekend in the first race of the season in Grand Bend, she won in the 800 class and placed 2nd in two others. Currently, they race on grass until the season changes. The racing season finishes in November also as a result of the weather.

At the Acton Agricultural Society Show and Shine, the Duncanson's racing team, "That Girl Racing", displayed their racing sleds. Along with their crew and family, spectators could check out the two Skidoo's she races, as well as see how their reaction time was in a mock race start. That Girl Racing has even been on the cable network Speed Vision.

That Girl Racing has an Acton crew and is sponsored by local business, Outdoor Power Equipment from Georgetown. With the Duncanson's children, Kyla, 14, and Kiersten, 10, attending most races, it is a family effort.

The big race for the team will be the upcoming September Hay Days race in Minnesota. However, if you want to see snowmobile drag racing locally, the team also races as close as Kitchener.
