CONSTABLE RIDDLE'S CORNER

With Village Constable Bill Riddle

Make your kids "Street Smart"
The next few columns will be in relation to teaching your children some "street smarts".

Making your children "street smart" - readying them to look out for themselves - is a gradual process. You can't wait until the night before they start school and then tell them everything they need to look out for. Too many "be carefuls" administered at the same time may arouse an unhealthy fear instead of the healthy sense of precaution you want them to have. The line between the two is very fine.

Start early - Begin to instill a sense of awareness as soon as you start taking your children out on the street. Not jaywalking is not enough unless you explain why you don't. Point out possible problems. Wait for the green light or the "walk sign", even when there's no traffic in sight, and explain why. It's worth the extra 15 seconds to teach your child about safety. Where there is no sidewalk, they should know to walk on the shoulder of the road, facing the oncoming traffic.

When they do start school, walk with them and show them the route, several times if necessary. Point out landmarks. Show them the safest street to walk on and the best corners at which to cross. If there are streets they should never walk down alone, tell them why.

Teach them how to enter and leave buses to ensure their safety, and to stay as far as possible from the roadway while waiting for the bus.

If there isn't an older brother or sister, perhaps you can ask a trusted neighbour child to come by and escort your kindergartner to school for a few days. He or she will likely be proud of having been asked to help.

If a suspicious-looking person is loitering around the playground, say: "Let's go for a walk. Maybe that person will be gone when we get back." Explain why you don't want to stay there right now. When the children are old enough to go alone, they will know not to stay if something doesn't seem right.
