Red Green makes movie in Rockwood

Rockwood residents recently got treated to a visit from the biggest darn goose likely to be seen in the area for quite some time to come.

As one local resident said, "It was just like the goose outside Wawa - only it was made of duct tape."

Now if that isn't enough of a hint ... Yes, the goose was the brain child of the king of duct tape, - Canada's very own Red Green.

Red (a.k.a. Steve Smith) and friends were in the village last week to film segments of Red's first full length movie Duct Tape Forever. Written by Smith the movie tells the tale of Red's efforts to save Possum Lodge from possession by the town after the local big-shot sues the lodge for damages to his vehicle. (He should never have parked over the Lodge's sludge pit.) Facing 10 days to raise a $10,000 fine Red and the gang decide to enter a duct tape contest - what else? with a $10,000 prize. Since the contest is hosted by an American municipality, Red and nephew Harold must drive his duct tape creation (a Canada goose as big as his van) to the contest.

The entry kiosk at the Rockwood Conservation Area made a perfect building to turn into a border crossing station and comedian Dave Broadfoot made a regal Mountie in scarlet uniform to be the crossing guard.

Some shots of Possum Lodge were filmed at Camp Brebeuf earlier this spring and some shots of the Possum Lodge gang whooping it up were done around the railway crossing on Main Street North and around the Twist and Shout Lounge on Thursday.

Movie producer Sari Friedland said the feature length film will be released across Canada next spring and will also air on the CBC. It will eventually get to video, but not for a while.
