Acton honours its war dead

In a list that seemed to go on forever, the names of the 43 young Acton men who gave their lives for our freedom rang out at the Cenotaph on Saturday morning at Acton's Remembrance Day service.

A few people who arrived a little late unfortunately missed the service, which started early when the children leading the parade from the Post Office, shaved a block off the route and arrived at the Cenotaph early.

In a heartfelt homage to the 114,000 Canadians who died in the three wars of the last century, Acton citizens gathered at the Cenotaph to take part in the service which included the laying of approximately 27 wreaths by politicians, emergency personnel, students, members of the Scouting and Guiding movements, local businesses and local groups and organizations.

Legion member Frank Spielvogel read the names of The Glorious Dead, beginning with Corporal J.L. Moore and ending with R. (Ronny) Rolston, Spielvogel's school buddy.

Legion padre and former Trinity United Church minister, the Reverend Bob Matton led the crowd in prayer, urging it to "continue to honour them (veterans) as we fight the good fight of faith, in defence of freedom, justice and peace."

As Acton Citizens' Band Master George Elliott played Last Post, the Colour Guard dipped their flags for a moment's of solemn silence, until Elliott sounded Reveille.

After the service, J.D. Pike, 11, of Acton stood at the Cenotaph with his mother and brother to reflect.

"November 11 means remembering the wars and the people who fought in them," the Grade Six student at McKenzie-Smith Bennett said.

"My great-grandfather died in the war and my grandfather served in one, but he didn't die, so I just feel kind of sad for people who died," Pike said.

Spielvogel said the crowd at the Cenotaph was "as big a one as I've see in years," and approximately 100 people attended a service at the Legion, followed by a dinner, at which they served 120 people.

"It was an all round excellent day and, of course, the weather made it that much better," Spielvogel said on Sunday, adding several people made a point of telling him they liked the Saturday service at the Cenotaph because it results in a bigger turnout.
