Olympic pin line-ups...

 Even learning that you could order a set of pins wasn't enough to make Helmig and the band of early-risers forego their daily ritual. "We want to be there at four (a.m.). We've become friends - we've been out for breakfast together a few times - Jean from Super Submarine comes over and brings free coffee and drinks while we wait and we have a good time," Helmig said, adding Discount Variety is selling two pins per person per day.

Helmig is disdainful of one Acton variety store that only sells the pins to a list of preferred customers, and said some in Discount Variety group won't shop at another Acton variety store that sold complete sets of the pins - against all rules - when the daily lineup became too much of a hassle.

The last of the set of pins were sold yesterday (Wednesday.)

Helmig is planning to frame her set of pins to save as a bit of Olympic history.

"shocked" when he realized that Mercer was talking about him for an individual award.

"I get excited and I hardly hear a word," he said.

"I was looking around when I heard them talking about one individual who was getting an award and a group, trying to see who it was - I shocked," MacSween said, adding the Acton BIA (Business Improvement Area) and Acton Horticultural Society deserve the praise. "They give me money and let me go play in the creek. You socialize more than you work, you know," he said, adding he hadn't realized how his love of gardening and beautiful things benefited the town.

Members of the Georgetown Remembrance Park Steering Committee also received a Community Recognition Award for their work with the redevelopment of the war memorial site.
