Confusion among cancer donators

The first Acton fundraising campaign for Cancer Assistance Services of Halton Hills (CASHH) is going well, according to the organization's executive director, Sheila Smith.

On Friday, Smith said she was confident the non-profit organization that provides cancer assistance services to 34 Acton clients and more in Georgetown, will hit its fundraising goal of $75,000 in Halton Hills with this month's campaign.

Smith said she was not aware that officials with the Acton branch of the Canadian Cancer Society are concerned the CASHH campaign, running at the same time as the Cancer Society's annual April appeal for funds, could confuse donators.

Asked if CASHH considered a different month for its campaign, instead of using the traditional Canadian

Cancer Society fundraising month, Smith said it was discussed, but April was "convenient for us."

"People have a choice to select their charities, so if someone is upset with us, we're not begging, we're just asking that - we're providing wonderful service to Acton," Smith said, adding the CASHH letter delivered to all houses in Halton Hills did not say "we want your money, but just said, help us help others."

Canadian Cancer Society Acton branch president Cathy Gerrow said CASHH initially said it would not canvass in April, and not in Acton.

"I guess our concern is that people are confused, and that they are aware that they are making a choice of who they want to donate to," Gerrow said on Sunday, adding the Canadian Cancer Society has a wonderful history and relationship with a generous Acton community.

Liz Bailey, the Canadian Cancer Society's Acton branch campaign chair, said two canvassers found people who thought they'd already donated money to the Canadian Cancer Society, but unwittingly made a donation to CASHH after getting its appeal for help.

Bailey said CASHH's decision to canvass in Acton in April was "surprising, dismaying and disappointing," in light of the group's earlier promise to do neither.

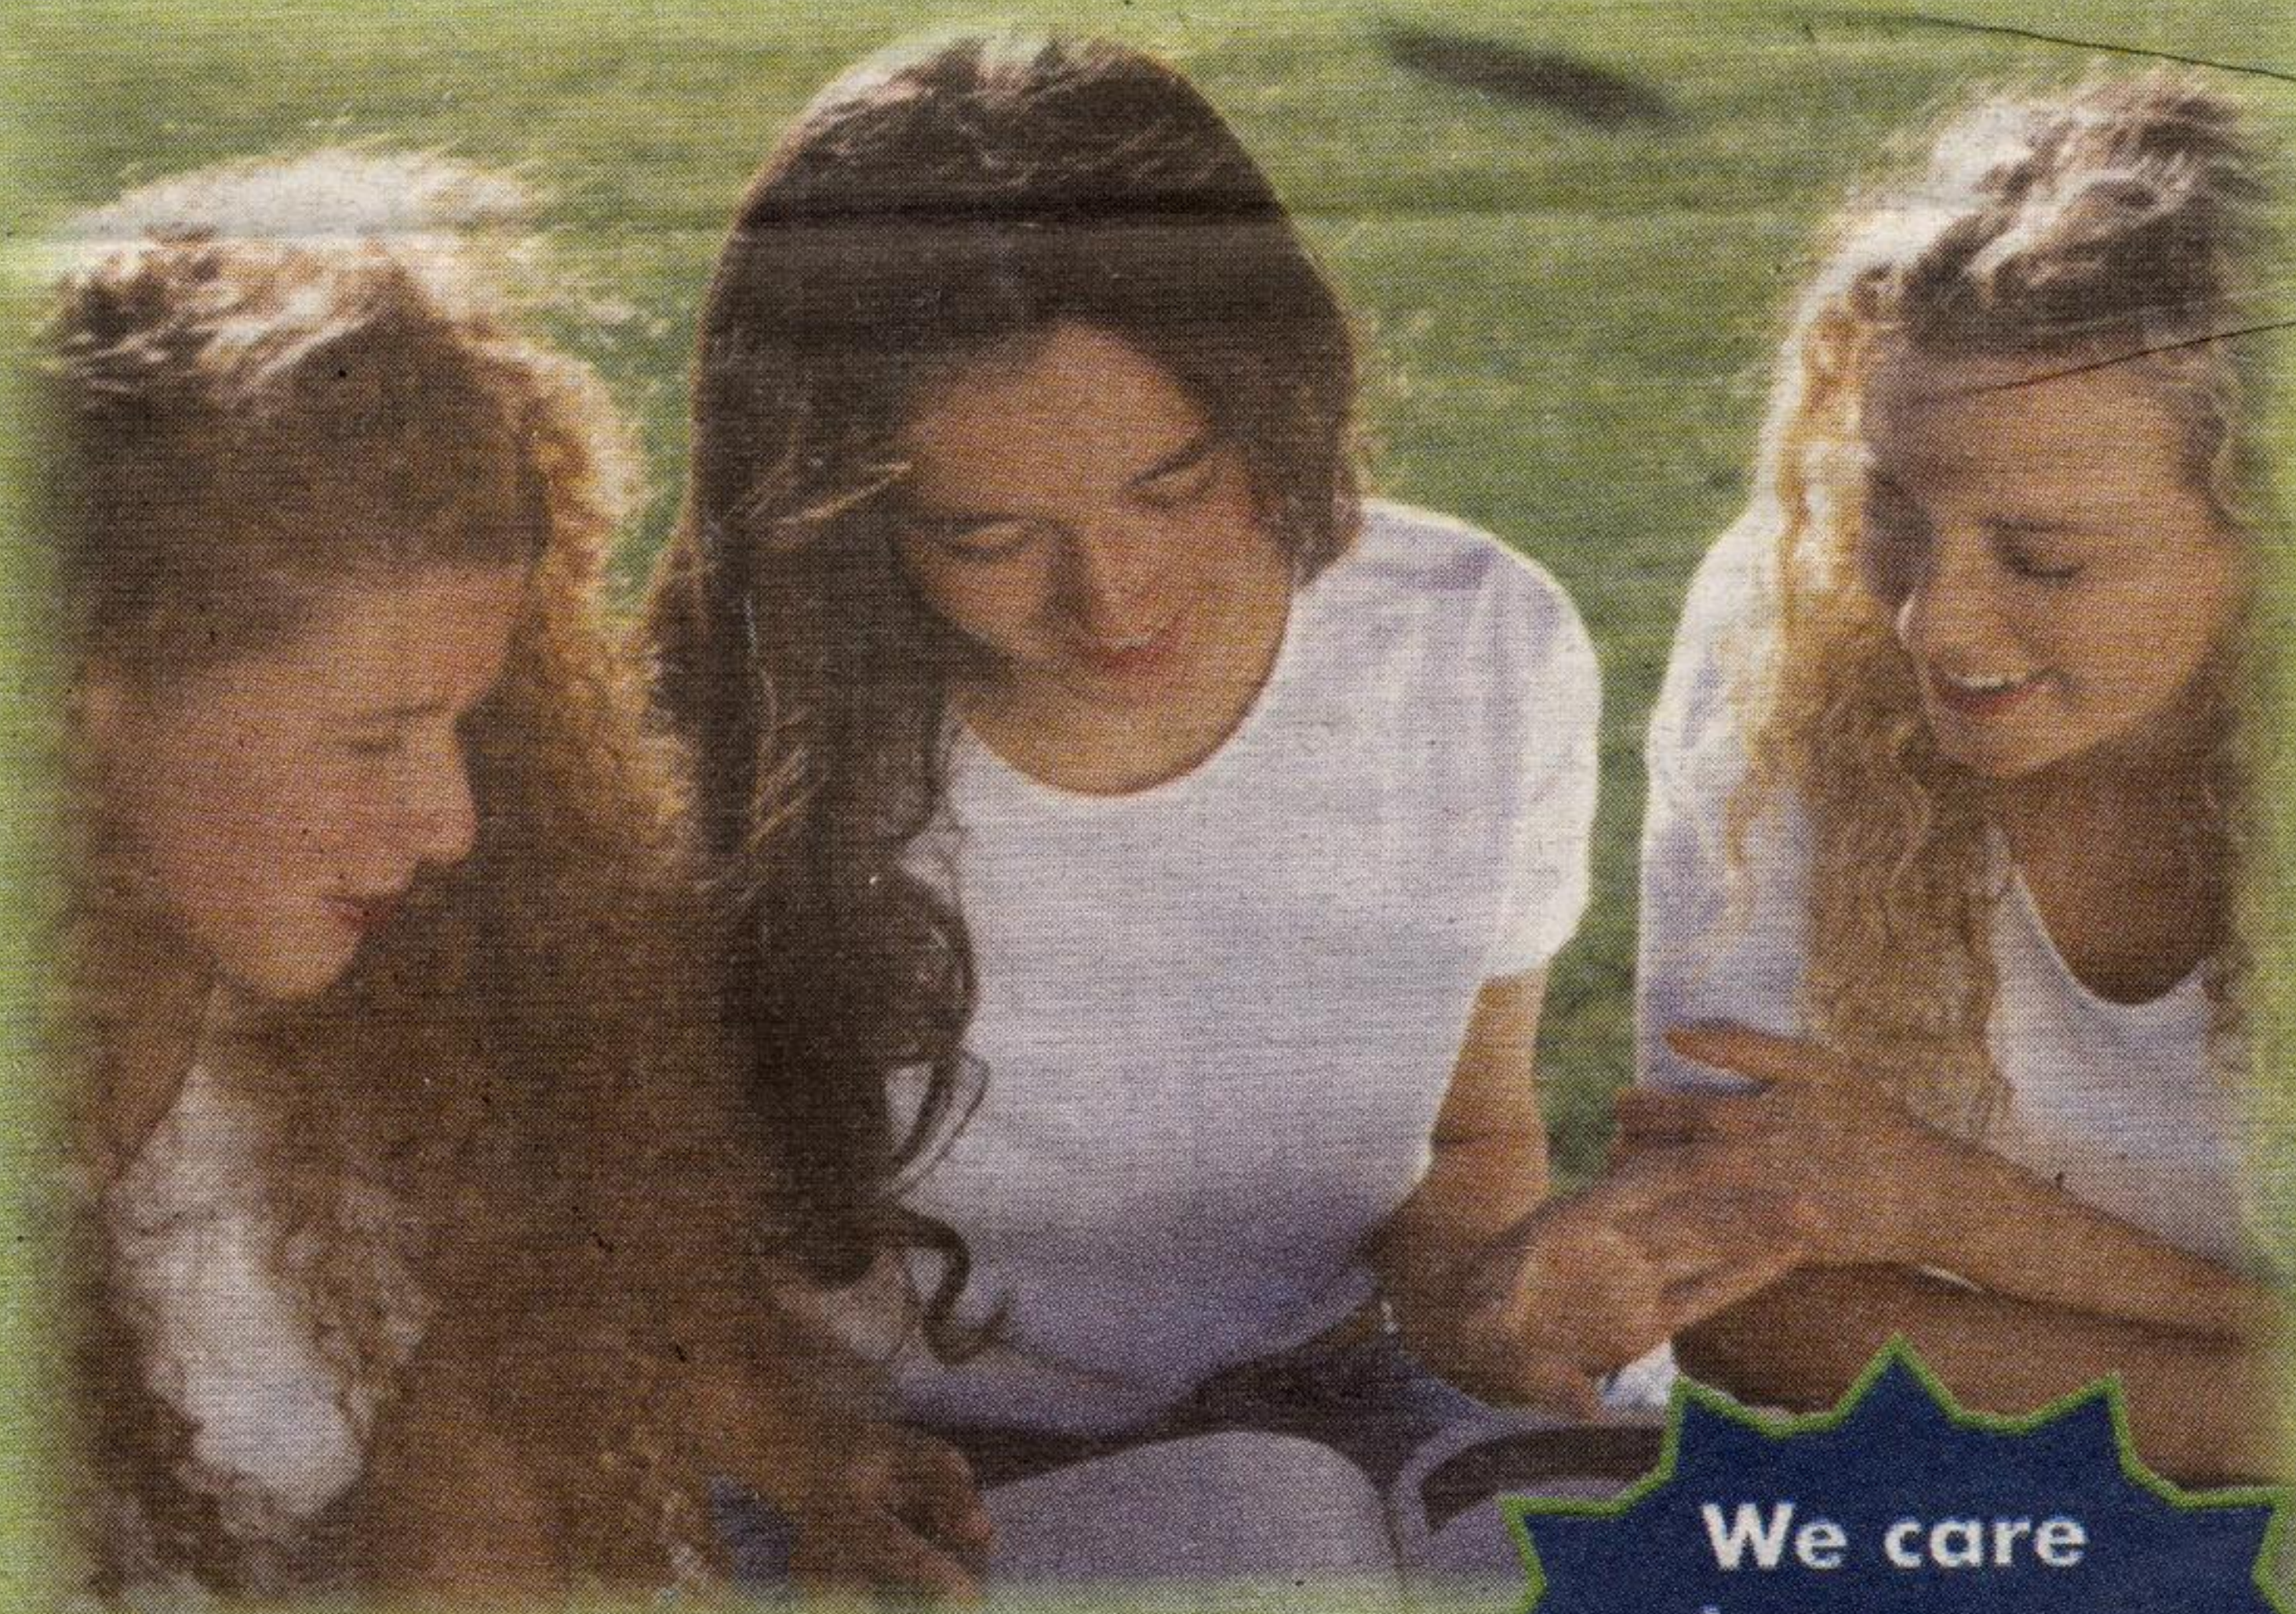

Bailey is confident the Canadian Cancer Society's April campaign will raise between $32,000 and $34,000.

SCOUTTREES: Members of the Regional Scouting movement, including Acton, will be planting trees on May 1 at the Acton quarry. Acton Cub leader Marion Urquhart and Cub Collin Brennan gratefully accepted a donation from former Scouting leader Gerry Rivers on Saturday at Sobeys. - Submitted photo
