Sports store, Minor Ball team up to help kids in the Dominican

Acton's Time Out Sports and Acton Minor ball teamed up to put smiles on the faces of some children in the town of Rio San Juan in the Dominican Republic. Una Lalonde, owner of Acton's sports store has been supplying Acton Minor Ball with uniforms and equipment for many years. In the past few years, Acton Minor Ball has moved to a system of providing uniforms to its players that do not have to be returned. In prior years, players were required to return their uniforms at the end of the season. There were a large number of mismatched jerseys that accumulated from years past that were not being used. "We wanted to see the uniforms go to a place where the kids would really appreciate having them, rather than just throwing them out," said Judith Kirkness of Acton Minor Ball, explaining why the effort was made to donate the jerseys. Una researched the possibility of having the jerseys donated to children during a family vacation in Puerto Plata in the Dominican Republic. So the Lalonde family travelled to Puerto Plata last month with as many old Acton uniforms as they could carry, as well as some new baseball equipment, including bats and balls, donated by Una's store. With help from their tour guide, a Canadian citizen living with her husband in the Dominican, Una together with husband Brian, and their children Jay and Monique, were able to go into the small community of Rio San Juan and personally hand out the jerseys to a large number of children who were playing baseball. "It brought smiles to our faces to see the joy of these children running around in blue Acton jerseys, something that many of our children take for granted. To see them all gathered together with worn baseballs and bats made from thick branches, just to play the game in a small field owned by a local farmer left us in awe. Now with the Acton jerseys they will be able to travel to other small communities and play as a full recognizable team," Una noted. "We all just wanted to make a difference and with the generous donation from Acton Minor Ball we were able to help out a bunch of kids who just love the game of baseball. They were all very thankful," Brian added.
