Letters

Son's birthday reminds him of WW II sacrifice

To the editor,
 Early next month will be my son's 18th birthday. I'm such a proud dad. I see him standing tall and lean in his work place and I hear such nice things through the grapevine about him that confirm he is the gentleman I've raised him to be. Hardly seems like yesterday I bounced him on my knee and now he is a man.
 As I had these thoughts of pride and joy I was also gripped with a feeling not so kind. I was at the Legion not long ago and saw pictures of Our Glorious Dead. And I remember thinking these fellows may have had enough whiskers to biologically qualify them as men, but, they were just boys. Just boys like my Stephen.
 It may not be November 11th, but, as I watch my son come of age it makes every day become Remembrance Day. To remember the men and women that gave us what we have, to remember those that are serving us now and to remember to pray that we not have to send any more.
