Van totalled

A GMC van struck a hydro pole Monday at 10:30 p.m. after it went out of control on the ice. The van, driven by a Georgetown resident, was heading north on Tenth Line. The driver was taken to Georgetown Hospital by ambulance where she was treated for minor injuries.

Hit and run

About $700 damage was done to the trunk and driver's side of a

Notes ruled inadmissible

The only money passing between Arnold and Pomeroy, according to Armstrong's financial analysis, involved a Florida condominium expected to be at the centre of additional charges to be heard Feb. 20.

Those charges also involve Pomeroy's wife, Pat Crimmins and north Halton developer Albert Tennant.

In Wednesday's court session, notes seized from the office of Arnold's divorce lawyer during a 1992 police search were ruled inadmissible as evidence by the judge. The crown attempted to introduce the handwritten notes as evidence in the trial.

The notes, were likely taken during a conversation with Arnold, said lawyer Patrick Schmidt, on the witness stand.

After hearing arguments from both the crown and defence on the admissibility of the notes, Mr. Justice James Clarke ruled the notes were protected by solicitor-client privilege and could not be introduced as evidence.

Conversation and correspondence between lawyers and their clients is considered confidential and protected by law. The only exception is when the correspondence involves or facilitates the commission of a crime.

"I find that the conversation was not made in furtherance of a crime or fraud or to facilitate a crime...at best, (the notes) are merely a narrative of past misbehavior," said Clarke, in his ruling.

The trial continued on Friday after press deadline. It will resume again on Monday.
