DON'T WORRY. IT IS NOT TOO LATE!

So, your lawn was a real mess with dandelions, thistles and ragweed this spring? You didn't get around to controlling them and the yellow blossoms have since gone to seed. Don't worry, it is not too late to get those troublesome weeds controlled. The second crop of weeds has begun to grow, and now would be a good time to control them.

Weed control products act as plant growth hormones which are taken into plant tissues. These specific plant hormones cause the plant to "grow itself to death" and use up food sources. Even though your Dandelions have gone to seed, weed control will still be effective.

Controlling Dandelions in your lawn is important, because the "broad" leaves of the Dandelion take up precious lawn space. As these weeds continue to grow, they smother new grass shoots while using up valuable nutrients and water.

Once the Dandelions and other "Broadleaf" weeds are controlled, the grass will have an opportunity to fill in the areas where the woods use to be (seeding may be necessary).

NEXT TIME: HERE COMES THE SUN!
