Ten ways to save money

The Canadian Oil Heat Association has compiled this list of proven methods to cut energy consumption and save money this heating season:

Watch the hot water use! Install a water-saving shower head that uses up to one-third less hot water, saving money and energy. And fix the drips: in one month, one drip of hot water per second from a leaky faucet will consume the equivalent of 16 baths.

Heating with Hydronics? If you have a hot water system, pre-set individual room controls to lower the temperature in less frequently used rooms. If upgrading a home heating system, a hot water boiler can provide heat and domestic hot water, which will reduce equipment and installation costs.

Service your heating equipment. Have your boiler or furnace cleaned and adjusted annually, for maximum efficiency. And use the opportunity to discuss more efficient heating options with the technician.

Check the filter. A clogged filter requires more fuel to heat the home. Remember to inspect furnace filters throughout the winter, and change them as necessary.

Time for a new furnace? In addition to equipment and installation costs, consider the system's flexibility to heat your home and hot water, and review fuel price forecasts - the unit will have to serve you for 20 years or more.

You may not need to replace the entire unit. If your heating system is old and inefficient, replacing the burner with a higher efficiency oil-filtered burner will cut costs by as much as 25 per cent a year - for a capital outlay of just a few hundred dollars.

Cool down while you sleep. Estimates show that by reducing your thermostat by just five degrees Celsius overnight, homeowners can cut as much as 14 per cent from their fuel bill. A thermostat timer can do it for you - its inexpensive and easy to install.

Weatherstrip. Check doors and windows for drafts and block them now - before the very cold weather arrives. With a side-wall vented furnace, be sure to keep fresh air intake vents open - furnaces need the air to ignite the fuel.

Let the sun shine in. Open drapes and blinds to increase solar heating; close them at night to minimize heat loss.

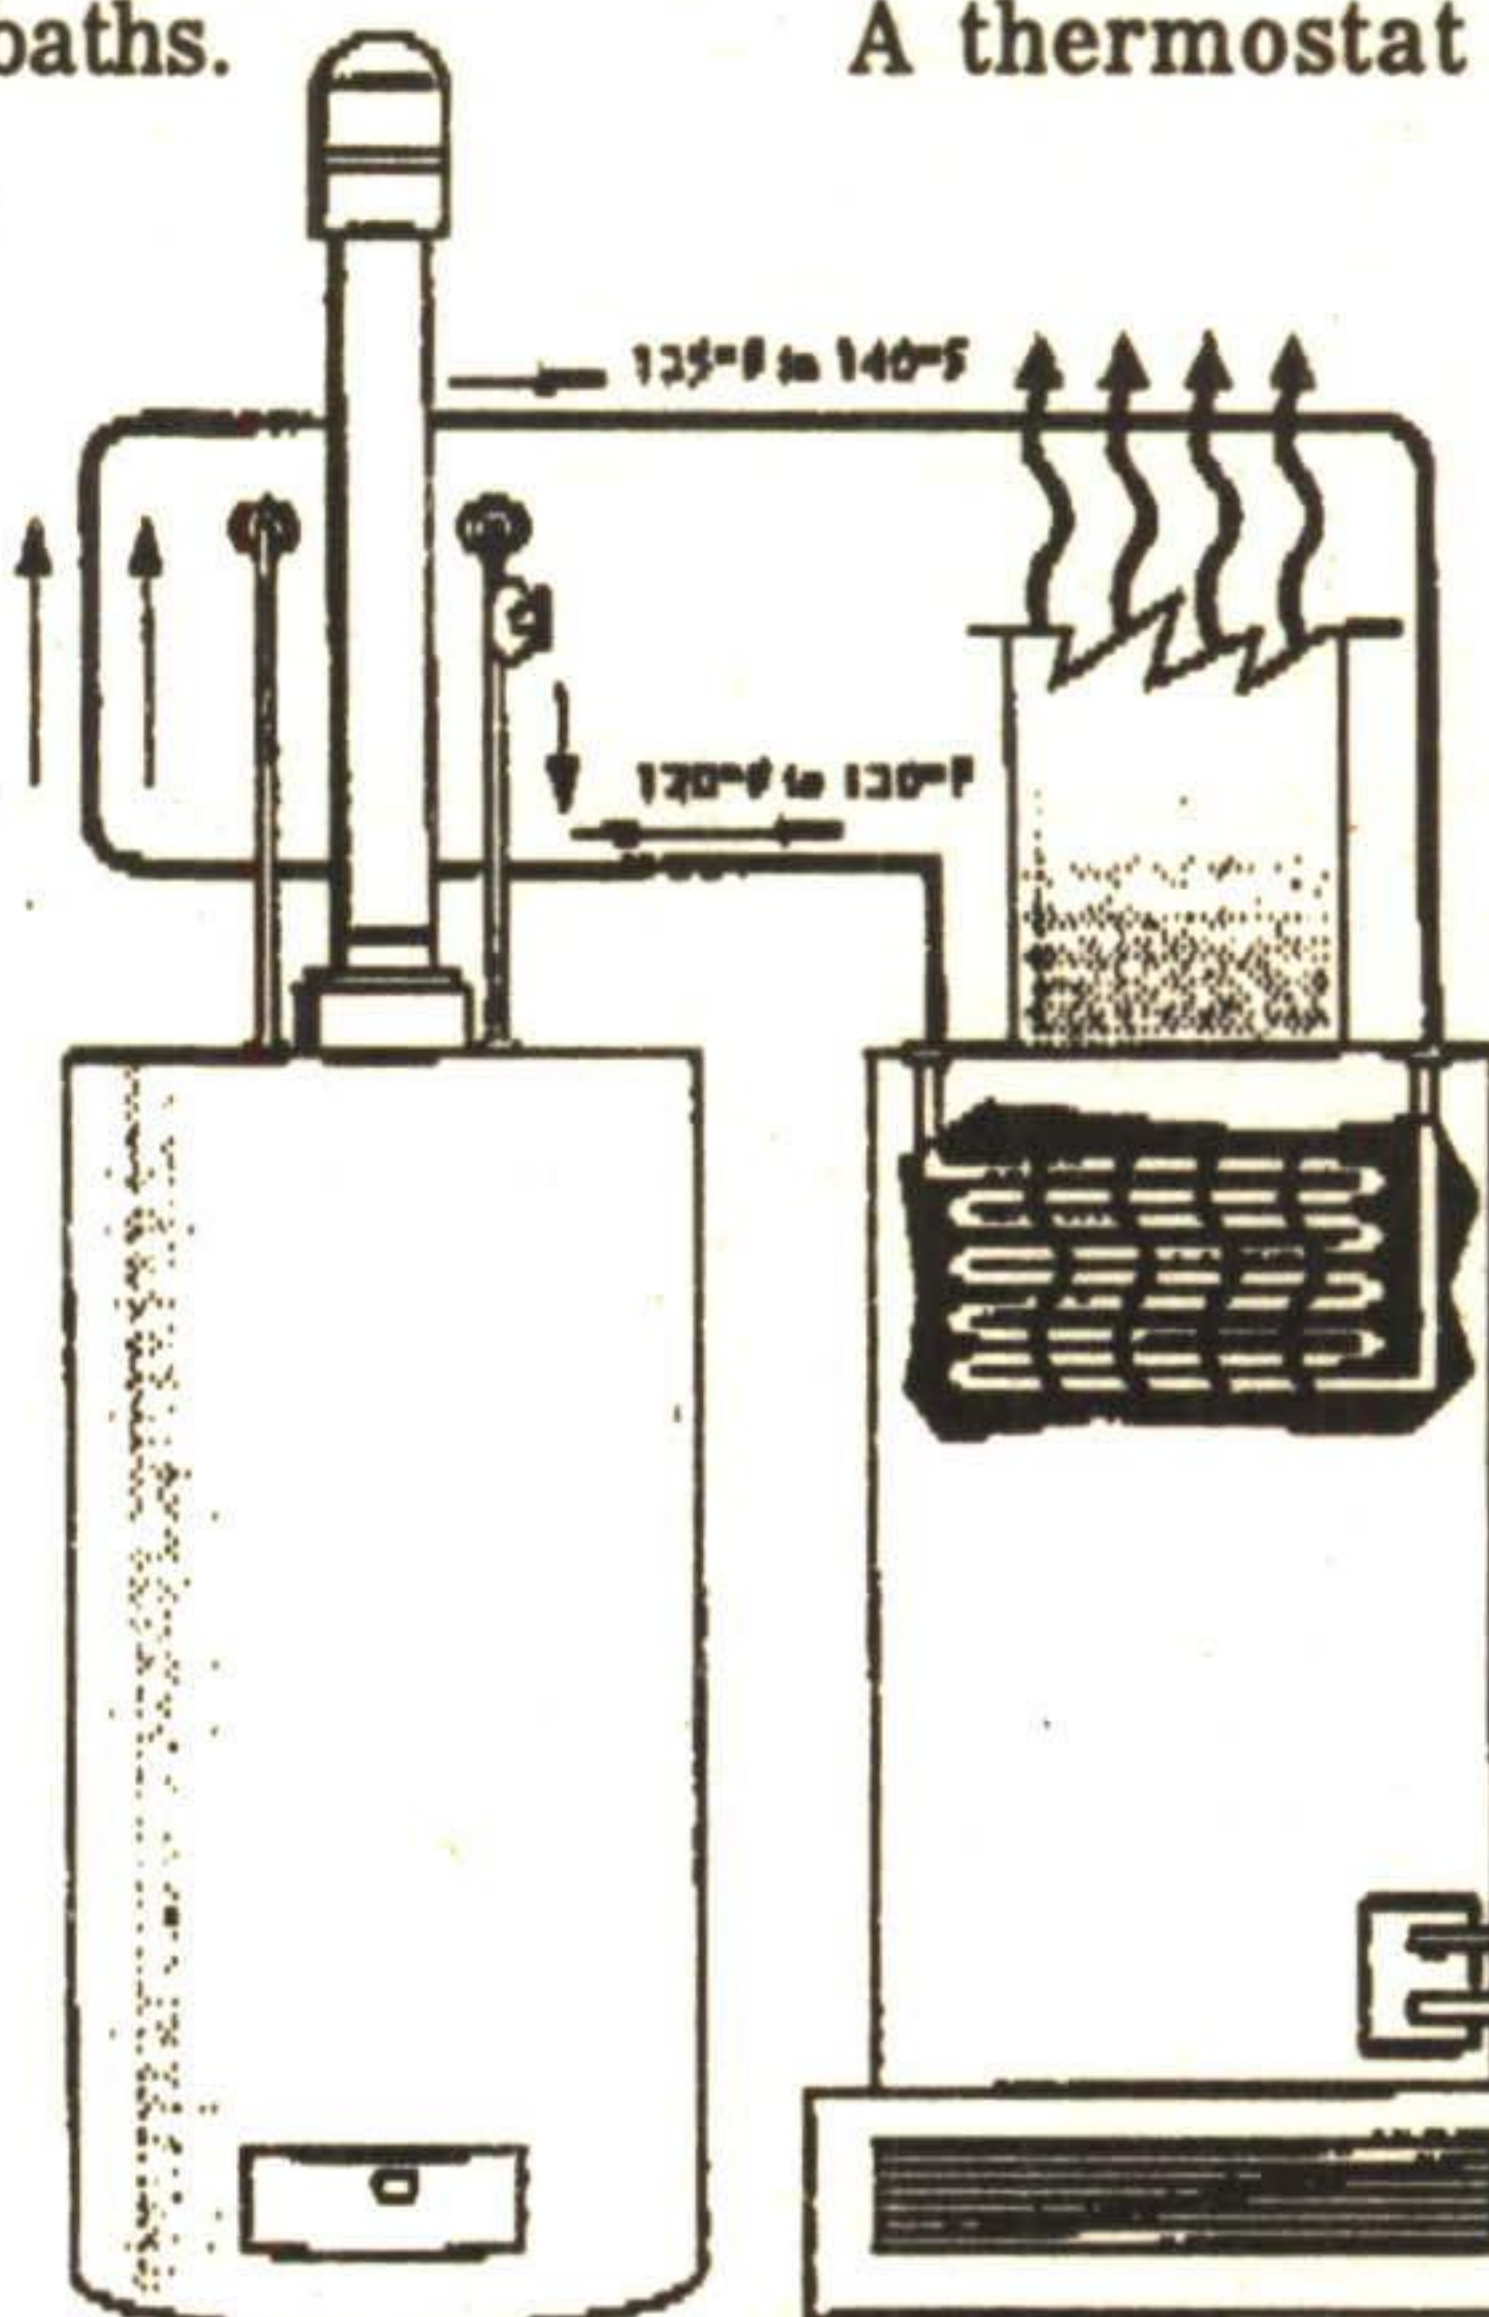

The Miscellaneous File. Keep your radiators free of objects, dust and dirt.

Heat your home and your water with the same system.

Save Money - A Combo Coil uses less energy and works more efficiently to heat your home and your water.

Save Space - Air handlers can be conveniently installed anywhere, because no furnace venting is required.

Count on Comfort - The Combo Coil provides even comfortable warmth in the winter, all the hot water you need year round, and can even accommodate an air conditioning coil.
