Halton Hills: stay out of GTA

Dear editor:

The GTA government sounds an awful lot like the Montreal Urban Community. In order to service Montreal's debt, all the surrounding suburbs were included in the MUC about 20 years ago.

We lived in Beaconsfield which was in very good financial condition. After joining the MUC we had drastically increased taxes, no control of our police force, lost our local fire department, etc.

Each town's mayor had one vote, but the City of Montreal had more than 50 per cent of the mayors. We, naturally, did not vote for those mayors and so we ended up with taxation without representation.

If Halton's population density makes it rural, then rural it be and rural it should stay. Our interests will not be served by joining any urban community. In Beaconsfield, we had no choice.

Kudos to Dr. Dunn vs. OHIP

Dear editor:

Well done Dr. Dunn!

Your story about Dr. James Mike Dunn shows that at least some people are willing to face repercussions from colleagues in order to correct a system that obviously needs adjustment.

I don't know that much about the billing system as it exists except that there seem to be some deep discrepancies as to how doctors use it.

I do know there are obviously some who get the most from it financially while others put patients first. I used to go to a medical group where the speed of how many patients they could put through in an hour and how often they could get you to come back seemed to be more important than any medical concerns you had.

My present doctor, as far away as Richmond Hill, is both an M.D. and holistic, probably only rates two or three patients an hour, on top of which he always returns your calls personally at no charge. His obvious desire to help you in any way he can is paramount.

It sounds as though Dr. Dunn is another whose concern for patients rates far ahead of his income and I'm not surprised that this earns the ire and scorn of some fellow doctors.

Go for it Dr. Dunn. I think you're one of a very valuable and vanishing breed. Your true returns will rate far ahead of anything you can put in the bank.
