RELINING DENTURES

Loose dentures on a resorbed jaw bone causes the distance between the nose and chin to become too short. As a result, the mouth and lip muscles sag, therefore causing the skin to become wrinkled and lined. The answer to this problem is either new dentures or "relining". If your dentures are under 5 years old, relining is probably the answer.

With relining, impressions are taken of the gums and bone as they are now. New plastic is added inside the dentures so they adapt to the new jaw contours. This makes the lips and cheeks fuller, therefore some of the wrinkles actually become "ironed out". It also makes the dentures fit more snug to the gums, so that the dentures become tighter.

Your gums are constantly changing and shrinking of the gums can create sharp ridges forming because of the pressure of the denture. This can cause considerable discomfort, and can lead to permanent gum damage. Relining your denture is a quick inexpensive way of giving you much needed comfort.

Your denture and mouth tissues should be checked once a year, as ill-fitting dentures can lead to various health problems.

Consultations are always free.
 You do not need a referral; simply call our office direct.
