Teachers pleased with response

Georgetown District High School (GDHS) teachers were pleased with the results of an information day they set up at Georgetown Marketplace Saturday.

The group of about 20 teachers, called Caring Community Teachers, all work at GDHS, live in Halton Hills and have children in the public schools here.

"We were very pleased with it. All of us felt very positive about the experience and for the most part the public was supportive," Mavis O'Neil said. They spoke to about 80 to 100 people during the day to raise awareness that the education system may get worse because of budget cuts.
