Cavity back or blade? Forged or cast? Graphite or steel? Titanium, metal, or persimmon? Oversized, midsize, or standard? Stiff shaft or regular? Strong loft or soft?

How do you find your way through all of these and other choices to find the golf clubs that are right for you? Well, a visit to Don Payne at Precision Golf would be a good start.

Before you can answer many of these questions, you need to think about what you want your clubs to do for you. This is usually a matter of trade-offs. If you want more distance, you may have to sacrifice some control. If you want more backspin, you may have to give up some distance. If you want forgiveness for off-centre hits, you may not be able to work the ball as much. You can't have everything. Don will help you through these choices and will recommend the make-up of clubs that will help you meet your priorities.

The first hard decision is the selection of the clubhead. Most irons sold these days have cavity back heads because they offer more forgiveness on off-centre hits. Oversized irons increase this forgiveness slightly and those with higher lofts offer greater control.

Although Don treats the selection of the heads for the woods as a separate exercise, many of the same factors are involved. Metal wood heads are hollow and this allows them to be perimeter-weighted. They also come in various sizes with the larger ones providing a bit more forgiveness and for some people, an extra measure of confidence.

Perhaps the most important decision will be the selection of the proper shaft to install in your clubs. Critical to this process is the measurement of your swingspeed. This is done separately for the irons and the woods and the information helps to determine which shafts have the best flexibility characteristics for you.

Finally, the selection of grips is purely a matter of personal preference. However, they need to be sized to fit each player.

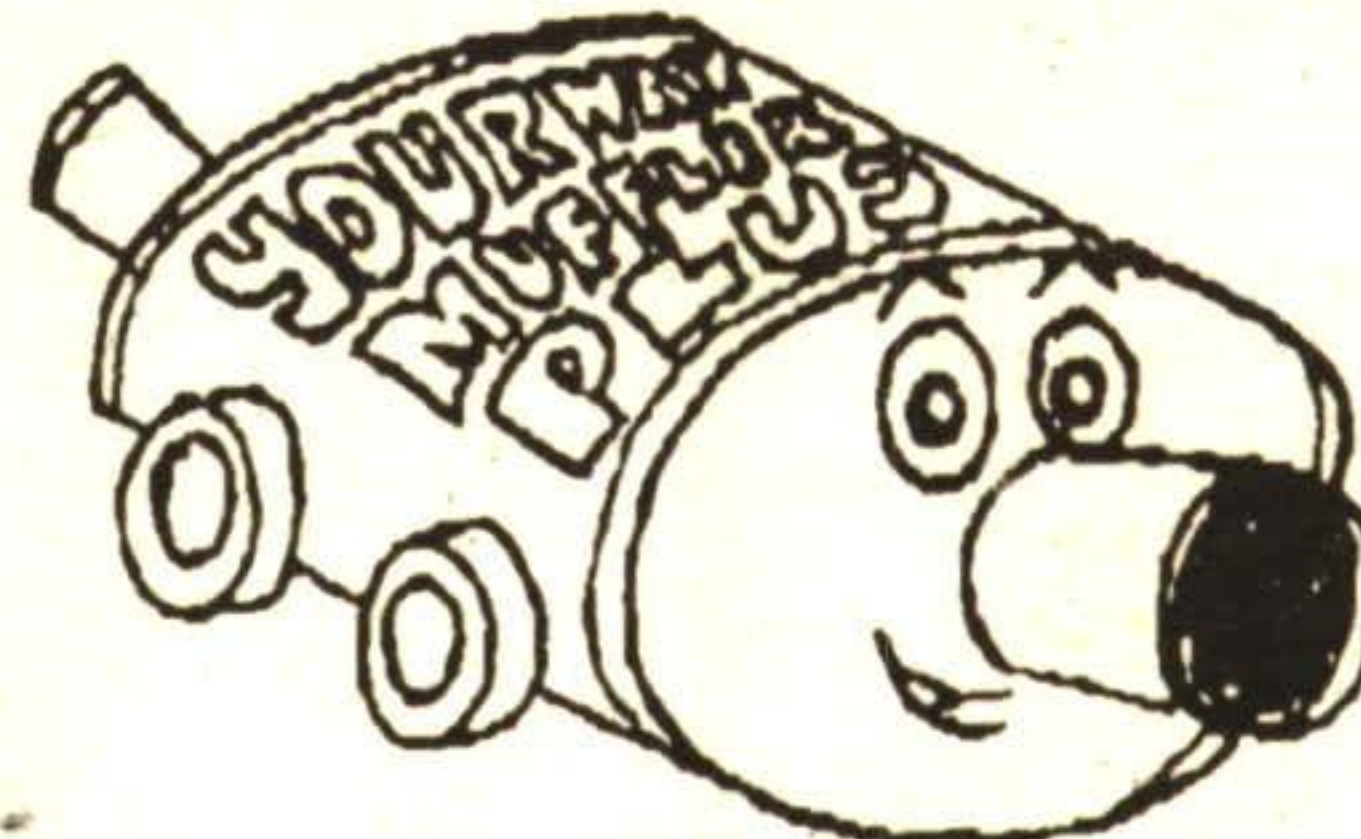

If you are interested in custom-fit clubs or club repairs, call Don at 853-2577 or drop in to the shop on Highway 25, 1 kilometre south of the lights in Acton.
