Topsy turvy

Rain forced the event inside but dozens of children still had the opportunity to watch an inline skating demonstration, try out the obstacle course and get their bikes inspected at the June 8 Fun on Wheel bike rodeo at Memorial Arena.

Up $1,200

EDC will hike home prices

The cost of buying a new home in Halton just went up by about $1,200. Local separate school board trustees joined their public school board counterparts in unanimously approving an education development charges (EDC) bylaw this month.

The bylaw will see new home owners ante up $1,269 toward the cost of building new schools in developing areas of the region. The public school board will get $764 of that money, with the remaining $505 going to the Catholic school board.

New industrial and commercial-use buildings will be charged a fee of 0.31 per cent of the building's value.

The bylaw, which came into effect June 3, will exempt churches, hospitals, colleges, municipal buildings and not-for-profit private schools.

The Hamilton Halton Homebuilders Association, along with other area homebuilders associations represented by the Development Charges Coalition, have agreed not to challenge the bylaw. Instead, under a negotiated arrangement, all parties will await an anticipated ruling by the Supreme Court of Canada, dealing with the constitutionality of education development charges.
