Follow these tips to ensure a happy barbecuing season

With the approach of spring, thoughts turn to the tantalizing sizzle of the barbeque. Before donning your apron and chef's hat, take the following steps to ensure your gas barbeque is safe:

- Be sure the burner ports and tube connecting to the burner are free of rust, lint, dust, carbon and cobwebs. Wash the complete burner assembly with warm soapy water.

- The propane fittings and hose that are connected from the tank to the barbeque should regularly be tested for leaks. To do this, make up a strong solution of soap and water. Never check for leaks using an open flame. Next, turn on the propane cylinder valve and use a brush to spread the soap and water over all connections. Any leaks will create bubbles. If there is a leak, close the propane cylinder valve immediately and have the unit checked and repaired by a qualified propane supplier or a licensed gas contractor.

Once your barbeque has passed the safety test, there are several things to remember when lighting it:

- Always have the lid of the barbeque open when lighting and have the match or lighter ignited before turning on the gas. Never move the barbeque after it has been lit.

- When finished, turn off the propane cylinder valve and the barbeque gas control valve(s).

- Do not use gas barbecues indoors or in an enclosed space. Always store propane cylinders outdoors in an upright position.

Propane and natural gas-fueled barbecues come in a wide variety of sizes and shapes but have one thing in common—the need to be maintained and operated in a safe, efficient manner.
