Public elementary teachers told by union to cease all voluntary work

Halton's 1,700 public elementary teachers have been instructed to cease all voluntary activities until teachers and the Halton District School Board can reach a contract settlement.

The English Teachers Federation of Ontario (ETFO) made the announcement late Friday after Halton's elementary teachers voted 90 per cent in favor of strike action.

"Our first mandate is to negotiate a settlement," said Phyllis Benedict, president of ETFO. "A strike is a last resort but (the board) has to know we're serious about the type of contract teachers are willing to work under."

The next bargaining session between the teachers and the board is scheduled for Oct. 8. The two sides have agreed upon most non-monetary issues but they are still seeking a resolution in the areas of staffing, preparation time, benefits and salary.

Heritage Foundation honors local man

Halton Hills resident Marshall Neilson is among the 127 people being honored by the Ontario Heritage Foundation in its third annual Heritage Community Recognition Program.

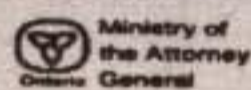

Neilson is being recognized for assembling an index of all births, marriages and deaths listed in the Acton Free Press (1875-1991), the Georgetown Herald (1864-1992) and Milton Canadian Champion (1862-1970). The index, which features over 170,000 entries, is available free of charge on the Internet.

During Heritage Week each year across the province municipalities are invited to nominate one person in their community who best exemplifies heritage preservation, promotion or protection. Recipients are presented with pins, based on the design of the Foundation's provincial plaque. They also receive a personalized certificate.
