

Meals from the mayor

Halton Hills Mayor Marilyn Serjeantson offered a helping hand Thursday as she rode with Meals-on-Wheels volunteers to deliver dinners to clients like Eveline St. Jacques of Kin Court in Georgetown. The event was part of Meals on Wheels week.

Police charges withdrawn against former councillor

Charges of discreditable conduct against former Ward 4 councillor Keith Bottomley have been withdrawn.

Bottomley and three other Metro officers were all facing the charge because they sought part-time council seats outside of Toronto. Bottomley was facing three counts of discreditable conduct for running for a council seat in 1994, serving on council for three years and applying to run in the 1997 election.

Metro police Staff Inspector Thomas Dalziel said last Thursday the charges against Bottomley and three other officers were withdrawn September 29. A police hearing to deal with the charges had been postponed several times.

Citing policy, Dalziel would not comment on why the charges were withdrawn. He said he wasn't aware of any officer facing the same charge the four did and added if there had been a finding of guilt the penalty could have ranged from a reprimand to dismissal.

Bottomley could not be reached for comment.
