

Caring where Care is Needed!
SERVING ALL OF ONTARIO

In 1990, over 80,000 children in Ontario (the Roehrer Institute, March 1997) were experiencing chronic health problems. This number is growing. A substantial number of these children suffer from progressive, life-limiting, terminal illness.

The closure of government institutions and the increasing longevity of children with chronic illnesses have placed families in the situation of providing the caregiving needs of these children, including those functions normally performed by specialized health professionals.

If we are going to rely on the families to provide this care, then we must provide the necessary physical and emotional support, as well as providing relief from the continuous 24-hour care of their child. After the child has died, the emotional support must continue as families learn to face life without their child.
