Candidates ready to meet the electorate

Retired principal Anand, 59, of Oakville, said he is "absolutely ready" for the election.

The Liberal candidate said the key issues in this campaign will be health care and education and locally he said in Georgetown overcrowding at schools and the need for a Hwy. 7 bypass are issues.

NDP candidate Jackson, 46, of Halton Hills, said throughout the campaign the NDP will be discussing their six-point agenda which focuses primarily on health care and education.

Jackson, who ran unsuccessfully as the NDP candidate in Halton during the last federal election and for a Ward 2 council seat in 1994, said if the NDP gained power they would reduce college and university tuition fees by 10 per cent and repeal Bill 160 (the Tories' education bill).

Jackson, a technical support staff member at Sheridan College, said his experience in the federal campaign has made him very familiar with the riding.

FCP candidate Gori, 49, who works as a computer consultant, is also the leader of the party.

The Halton Hills resident said his party's focus this election will be to "try and win at least one seat in the province" and he is optimistic they can achieve that.
