Local fighters capture medals

Because of work commitments, Harrison didn't get as much time to train for the Canadian championships as Veltman did. But bringing home a medal has fueled his dedication.

Harrison had 15 years of karate training behind him but his wrestling experience was limited to the months leading up to the competition.

In his first two matches he came out aggressively and set the tone for the match. However, his lack of training hurt in his one loss.

"With judo (specialists) I was not as well prepared," Harrison said. "I've only got so much grappling experience and he was more experienced than me on the ground."

There was also an adjustment period adapting to a new style of fighting. He said it took a moment to realize that once he was taken down he was still free to punch.

Although he went to Canadians just hoping to gain experience, earning a medal has convinced him to rededicate himself.

"2004 is definitely a goal I see myself trying to achieve," he said.
