

Park students vying for an All-Star win

Park Public School students are facing off against other schools for a trip to the National Hockey League's All-Star Game festivities.

Park's Grade 4 classes have entered a NHL-sponsored writing contest with the winning schools going to NHL FANTASY, a collection of interactive and educational attractions, during the all-star game week in Toronto.

More than 28,000 students from 12 school boards are participating in the contest. It was so eagerly received that there is a waiting list of another 10,000 students.

Park students are writing on their chosen topic of the rewards of being a team player. In their piece the students will write about an activity that they are involved in that requires team work, what it means to be a team player and how being part of a team has benefited them.

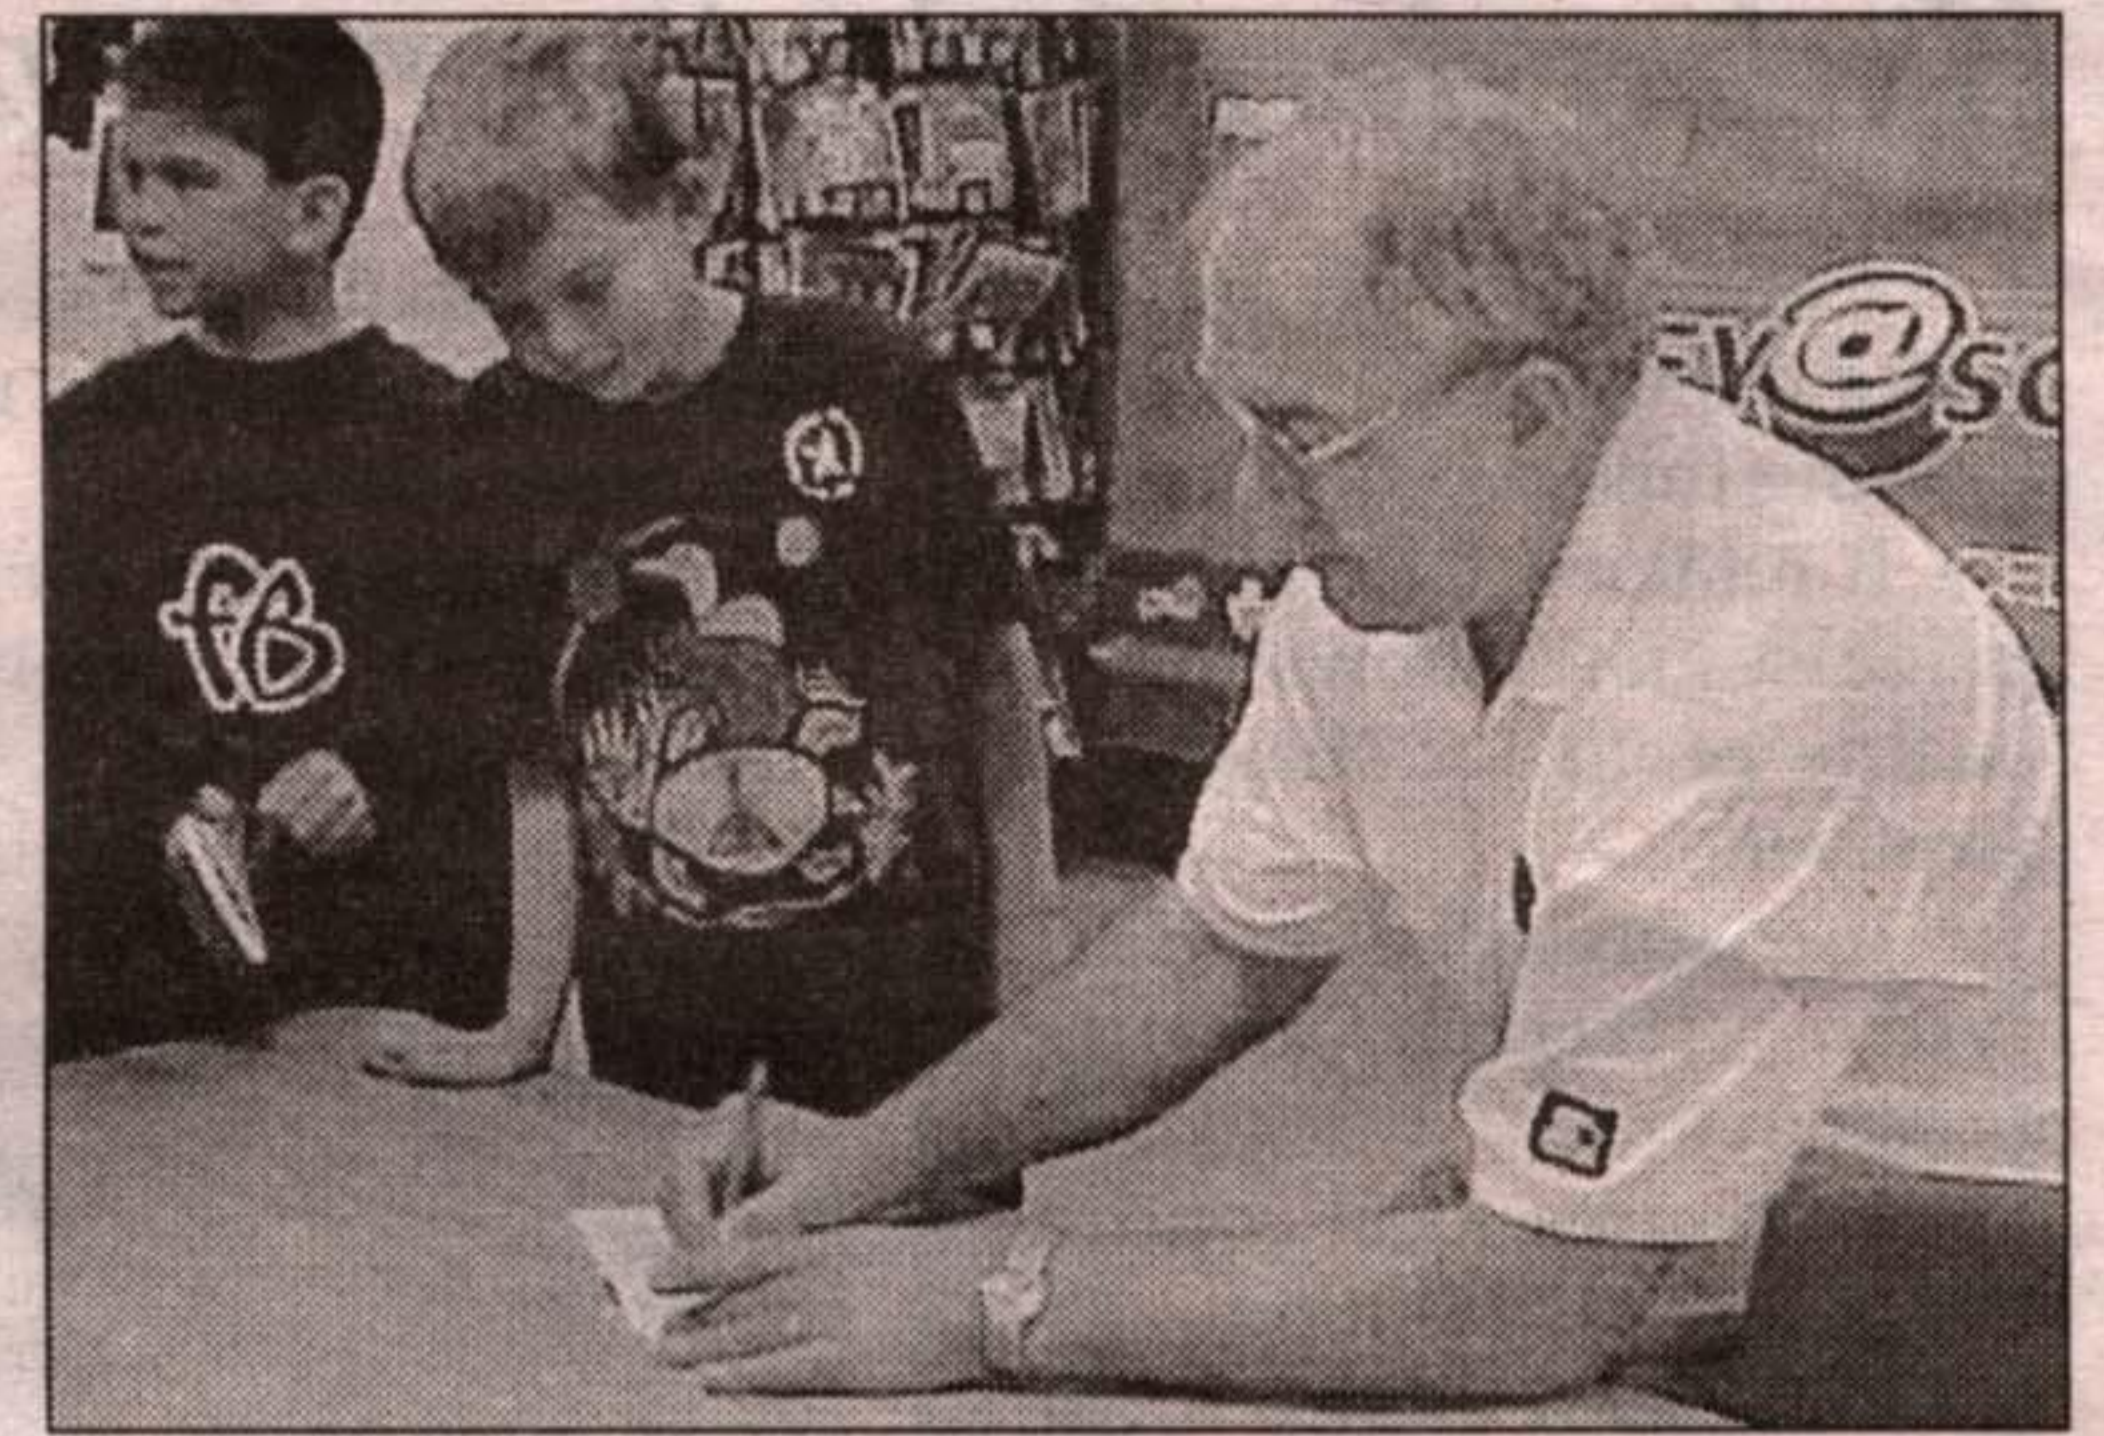

Park principal Wendy Harrison said the writing contest is an extension of the school's I Care program, which promotes students caring for and respecting one another.

"What the kids are learning is that there are all sorts of teams in life and the bigger the team is, the more there is a need for cooperation," Harrison said.

The students have had many visitors to help them with their project, including Halton District School Board chair Ethel Gardiner and NHL Director of Officiating Bryan Lewis. Lewis used the NHL rule book, which refers to the word team 271 times and teammate nine times, to show the importance of teamwork. He also highlighted the roles of team members and their importance to the team.

Aunt Maud's recipes off to Japan

Aunt Maud's Recipe Book will be translated into Japanese by 2001.

Norval authors Elaine and Kelly Crawford have reached an agreement with a Japanese firm to publish their book in the Japanese language, as a direct and literal translation of the original.

Drawings may be added to illustrate the Canadian style of food preparation, which could be foreign to traditional Japanese cuisine.

Lucy Maud Montgomery's original handwritten recipe book was the inspiration for the creation of Aunt Maud's Recipe Book. First published by Moulin Publishing, of Norval, the book has won two design awards. It has been out of print for almost a year, and the Crawfords have printed a second edition that will be available for this year's Montgomery Christmas Celebrations, tomorrow (Nov. 27). The Crawfords will be signing copies of their book at Crawford's Village Bakeshop on Hwy. 7 in Norval on that day.

Other book signings taking place at Crawford's on Saturday will be The Lucy Maud Montgomery Album, compiled by Kevin McCabe and edited by Alexandra Heilbron (from 10 a.m. to 12 p.m.) and Lucy Maud and Me, a children's novel by Mary Frances Coady (from 2 to 4 p.m.).
