Artists' work deals with human form

The Williams Mill Gallery is currently presenting a show featuring guest artist Hanna Boos, internationally acclaimed for her sensitive interpretations in bronze and clay, and Williams Mill artist Rosalinde Baumgartner, whose prints, drawings, and paintings also come from a fascination with the human form.

expression. Drawings provide the foundation for prints and paintings.

Baumgartner and Boos each create with shape, colour and form in a way that is true to their individual visions, and the parallels between drawing and sculpture are evident in their work.

Boos' favourite material is clay because of its earthy quality and its willingness to be shaped. She also enjoys experimenting with a variety of material. The beauty of the human form and the harmony of its movement have always intrigued this accomplished sculptor.

Baumgartner experiments with various media in a free, lyrical, and intuitive manner. Her work is the outcome of a continuing interest in the human form. Drawing from life, she searches for the essence, capturing a fleeting gesture, a momentary

Boos' sculptures are in collections at the University of Toronto, in New York City, Washington, D.C., Baltimore, California, Ottawa, Toronto, Kitchener and Guelph, and in several cities in Germany.

An opening reception with artists present will be held Saturday, September 16, 2-5 p.m. The exhibition is on now and continues until September 24.

The gallery is open Wednesday through Sunday, noon to 5 p.m.
