Teacher talks going down to the wire

Negotiations are hoping for better results Friday when contract talks resume for Halton District School Board secondary teachers.

Some contract language was cleared up during last Thursday's talks, but little else happened, said Michael Ellis.

"It was a very humdrum day, but we were doing the little stuff that needs to be done," said Ellis, the board's negotiating chair. "We have not brought forward positions on major issues like money and working conditions."

This week's negotiations are the last scheduled, but the Burlington trustee is hoping for more bargaining dates.

"I think Friday will be more productive," said Ellis. "We're going to possibly get into the major issues."

Teachers' union leader Larry Chud said there's still a lot of work to do on the contract.

"We expect some substantial discussion on Friday," said Chud, president of Ontario Secondary School Teachers
