

Youth violence conference planned

The Parent Education Network will host a conference at the Georgetown Alliance Church aimed at educating parents and students about youth violence.

Family Focus 2000, to be held November 4, will concentrate on youth violence, the trends, causes and effects and how parents and educators can help protect their children. There will also be workshops focusing on dealing with anger, anti-bullying programs in schools and other related topics.

Stuart Auty will be the keynote speaker. Auty is the executive director of the Canadian Safe School Network, a non-profit organization working to reduce youth violence and ensure safer schools and communities.

Georgetown Alliance Church is located at 290 Main Street South. The conference will begin at 9 a.m. and will continue until noon. Tickets will be available at the door for $15 (children are admitted free) if space is available. The cost includes refreshments and childcare.

Family Focus 2000 is the third conference presented by the Parent Education Network, a non-profit group of local parent volunteers that supports parents by providing parenting education opportunities.

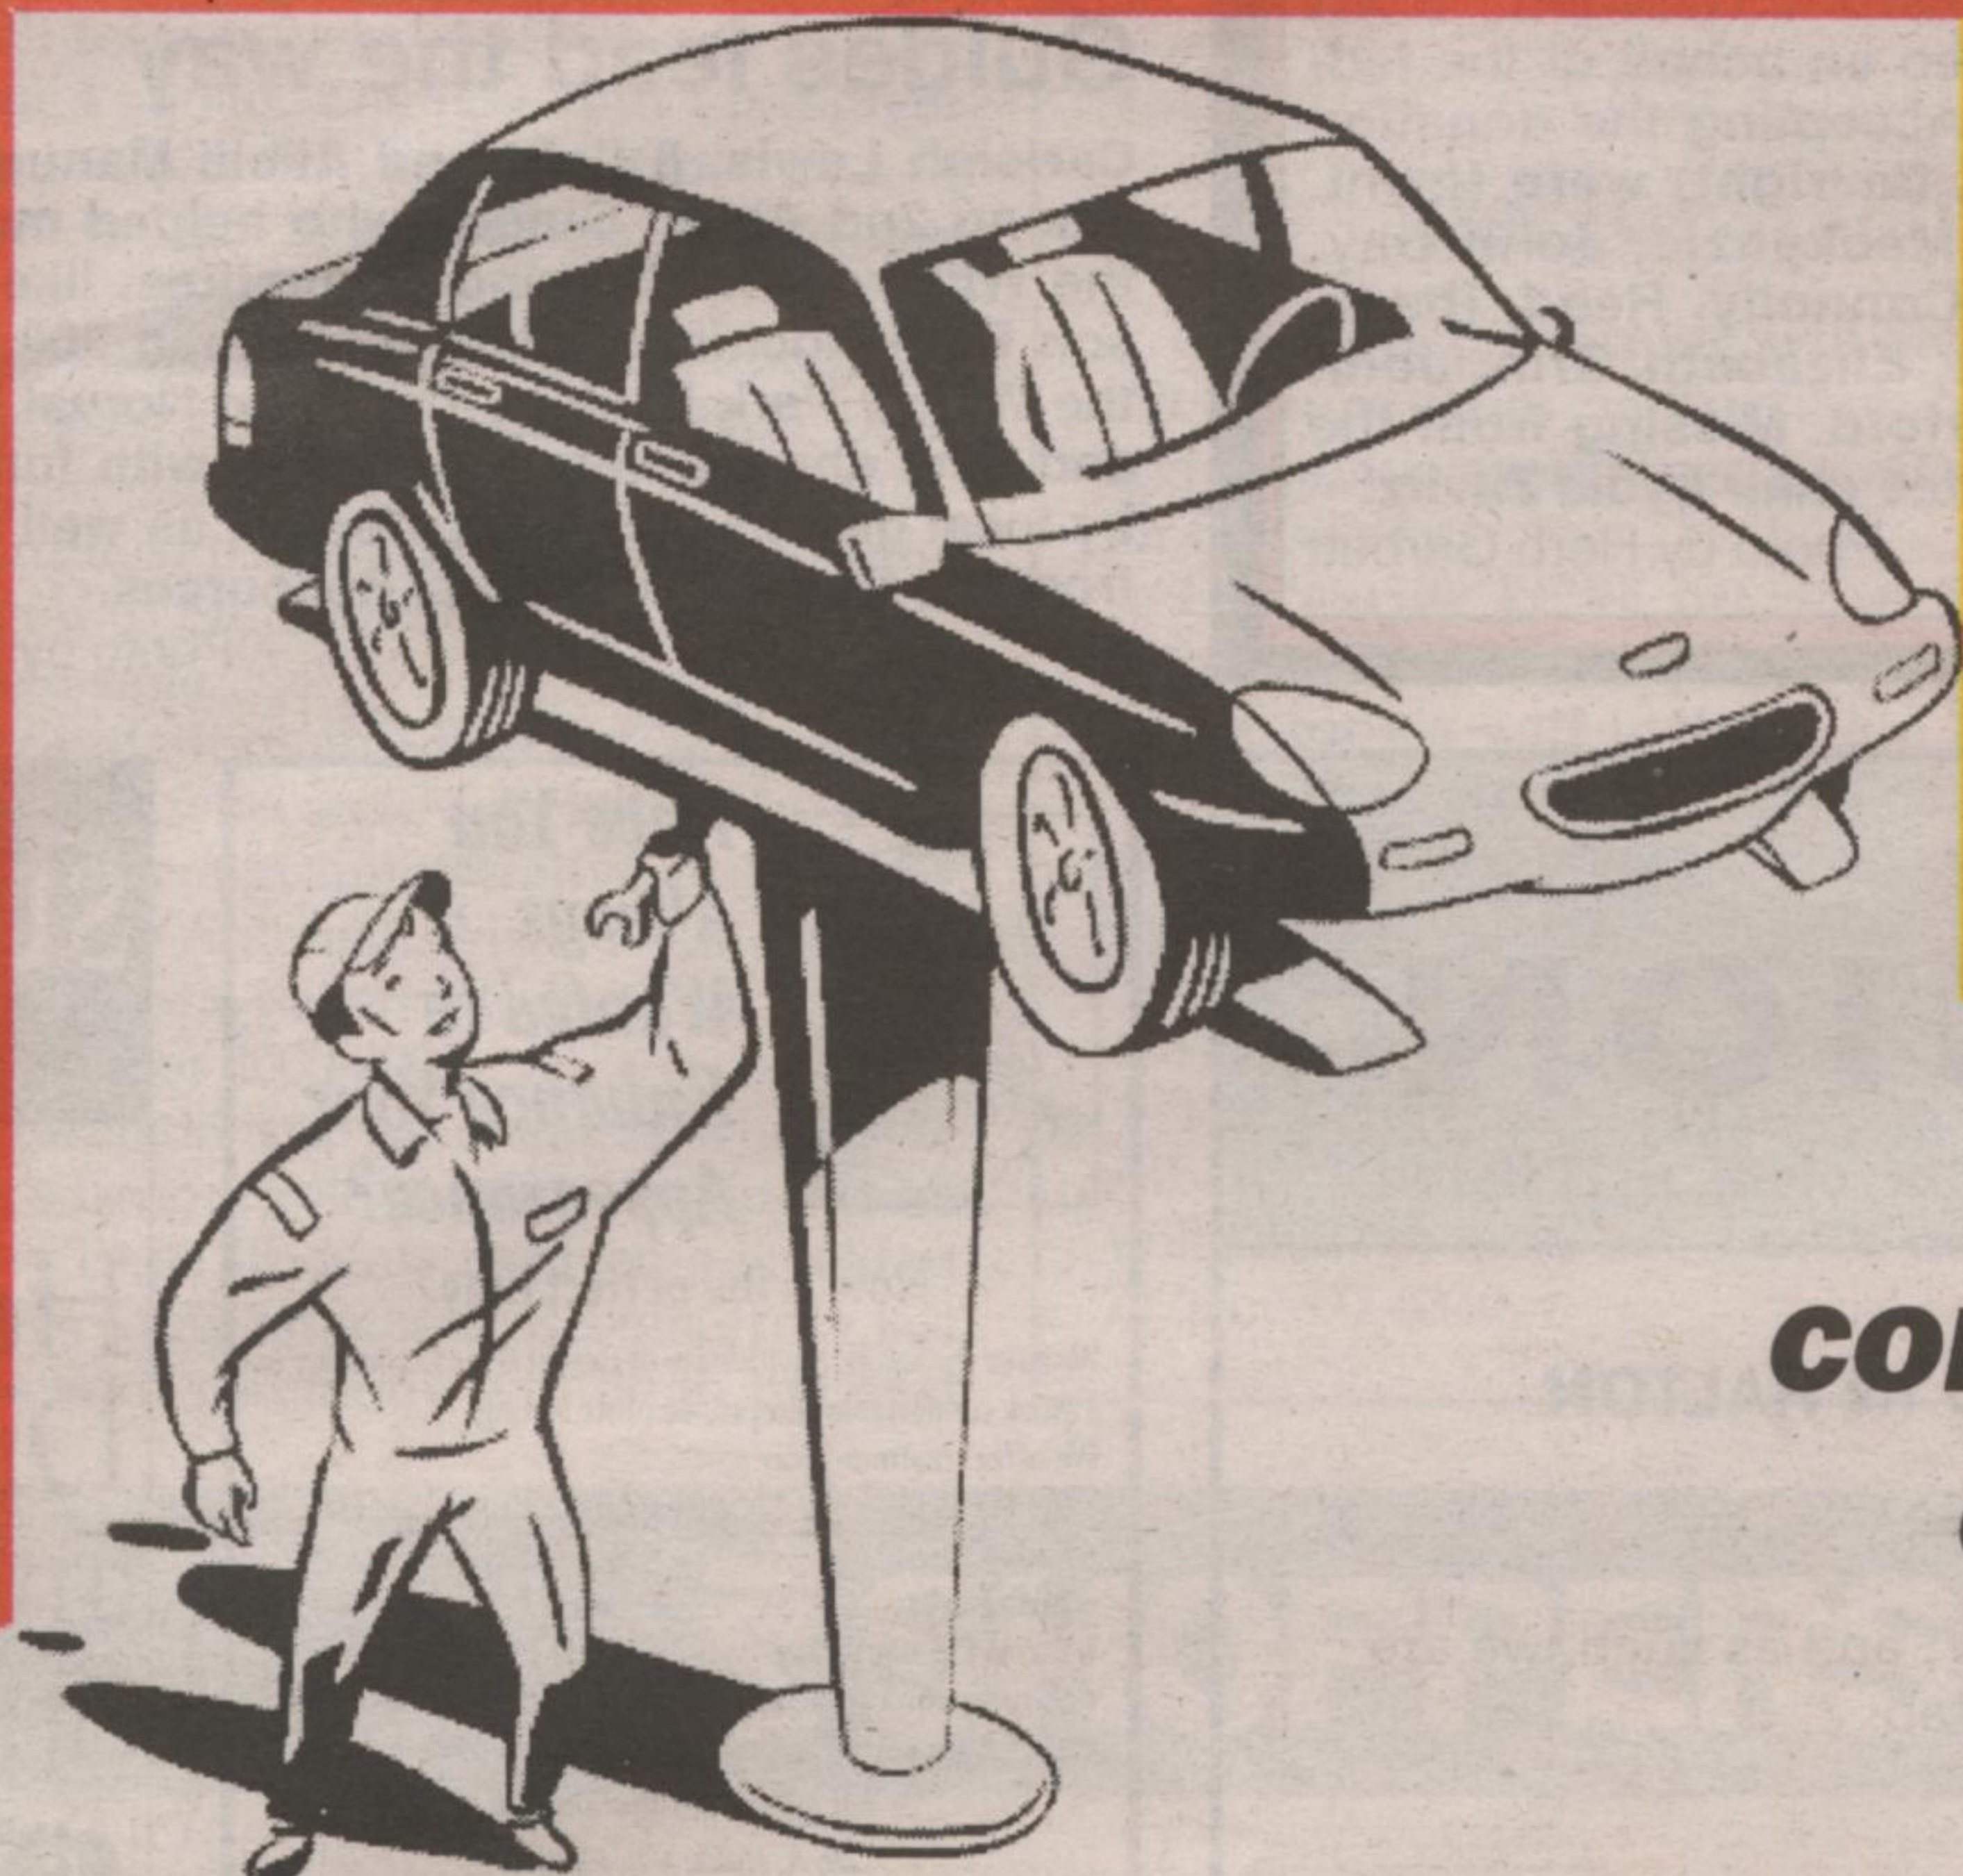

For more information contact the Halton Region Health Department at 877-2238 or visit them at 93 Main St. South.

Relaxing in style

What else does one do during a home show but enjoy the products? Bethany Vinson of Georgetown took time Thursday to peruse Hollis and Associates' display featuring garden supplies and wicker furniture at the Georgetown Marketplace Home Show.
